THE HARMSWORTH ATLAS

AND GAZETTEER OF THE WORLD

PREFACE

THE claim deliberately advanced for this Atlas is a somewhat ambitious one, but a very brief examination of its contents will, it is confidently believed, more than justify it.

It claims to provide in a single volume of modest price, so arranged as to be readily accessible, a complete encyclopædia of geographical information, which hitherto has only been available to the few who could afford to purchase a library of expensive works of reference—works, moreover, which require for their use trained intelligence and ample leisure.

Yet the possession of this information is of the most vital importance in these days of competition and keen international rivalry, when every year business men are called upon to extend their operations into the most distant portions of the world, and such questions as the nature and supplies of raw materials, and their distance from industrial centres, become of greater importance in the struggle for economic supremacy.

Every day brings news of occurrences at home and abroad—political movements, social events and the like—which cannot be clearly grasped and understood without referring to a good map of the area in question. A complete and up-to-date atlas with an exhaustive index is a necessity to every reader of the daily paper.

The maps and other information contained in the Harmsworth Atlas fall naturally into five groups, which may be briefly described as follows:—

I. LARGE SCALE REFERENCE MAPS.

In the preparation of these maps no expense has been spared to render them the most perfect and up-to-date specimens of modern cartographical work, and, in order to secure the requisite amount of detail, it has been necessary to divide each important country into several sections according to its size. To prevent any confusion arising in the mind of the reader, a small key map of each country is printed on the back of every sheet, showing not only the section it represents, but also the positions of all the adjoining sections and a reference to their place in the Atlas.

In addition to these large scale reference maps, there are a complete series of general maps on a smaller scale, suitable for rapid reference, and over 190 inset maps.

Whilst every portion of the world is delineated with an amount of detail never before attempted except in the most expensive library atlases, special attention has been devoted to Great Britain and her colonies, and over seventy out of a total of 210 pages of maps are set aside for this purpose.

In no other atlas ever published is so much information about the British Empire obtainable.

II. INDUSTRIAL AND COMMUNICATION MAPS.

This unique series of specially prepared charts provides information which has never before been placed at the disposal of the public in such a simple and graphic manner.

Whilst of great interest to the general reader, they should prove indispensable to business men of every description, and to those engaged in teaching. The various natural resources and manufactures of every country are shown in their proper positions, together with the means of transport to the nearest ports, and the various steamer routes connecting these ports with other countries. The distance along each of the sea routes is given, together with other information such as consular representation, the existence of docks, coaling stations, lighthouses, etc. The omission of all unnecessary detail and hill shading on these charts renders them exceptionally clear and easy to refer to.

III. PHYSICAL MAPS.

A series of graphic representations of the comparative height of the land and the depth of the ocean all over the world has been included because so many of the facts connected with political and commercial geography can only be properly understood by a knowledge of the underlying physical phenomena.

The variations in the height of the land and the depth of the water are indicated by means of contour lines, the spaces between which are tinted in different colours. The British Isles and the Alps have been singled out for specially detailed treatment on account of their exceptional interest. Numerous sections and profiles across important areas accompany the larger maps.

IV. MAPS AND DIAGRAMS OF THE WORLD'S COMMERCE.

Over 200 maps and diagrams in this section are devoted to a complete pictorial and statistical synopsis of the growth and present position of our foreign and colonial trade. Among other matters of the greatest possible interest, the following subjects are dealt with: The historical development of the British Empire, an exhaustive account in detail of the world's chief commodities, and an interesting series of comparisons between the chief political and business activities of the principal countries of the world.

In every case official statistics and the most recent authorities have been consulted, and in the preparation of the maps and diagrams illustrating the world's commodities the valuable co-operation of the proprietors of Sell's Commercial Intelligence has been secured, with the result that it has been possible to obtain access to sources of information not otherwise available.

V. GAZETTEER INDEX.

The 284 pages comprising this portion of the work represent an enormous amount of labour and research, about 105,000 places being described. The combination of an exhaustive reference index with a gazetteer on such a vast scale has never before been attempted in the history of geographical publishing, and the value of this feature will at once be apparent. Wherever possible, the populations of towns and villages have been given, and for this purpose all the most recent census returns of this and other countries have been consulted.

In conclusion, it is confidently anticipated that this Atlas will take its place beside the few indispensable works of reference which the enormous resources and enterprise of modern publishing have placed within the reach of every one, and that by securing universal approval and acceptance it will justify the claims which have been made for it.

MAPS AND DIAGRAMS OF THE WORLD'S COMMERCE.

British Isles—Natural Resources and Industries.

The BRITISH ISLES owe their political and industrial supremacy to natural conditions. The mildness of their climate, their favourable geographical position, nearly in the centre of the Land Hemisphere, their numerous admirable harbours, and their immense natural resources, especially in coal and iron, caused them almost of necessity to become the most important manufacturing country of the world.

The maps given above are designed to show the agricultural and industrial resources of the United Kingdom. Agriculture is dependent upon climatic conditions, and the character of the surface and soil; and a comparison of the maps showing the climate and the percentage of land under crops, brings out the fact that where the climate is dry, and therefore suited to the cultivation of cereals, as in Eastern England, the agricultural population is comparatively dense, while in the wet and hilly regions in the west of the United Kingdom and of Ireland, the population is engaged chiefly in pastoral pursuits, and is relatively thin. Of the total area of the United Kingdom 48·2 per cent. is under crops and grass, 30·3 consists of hill pastures, 3·9 is woodland, and 17·6 is uncultivated. The total live stock numbers 10,742,240 cattle, 29,006,500 sheep, 2,114,300 horses, and 3,589,240 pigs.

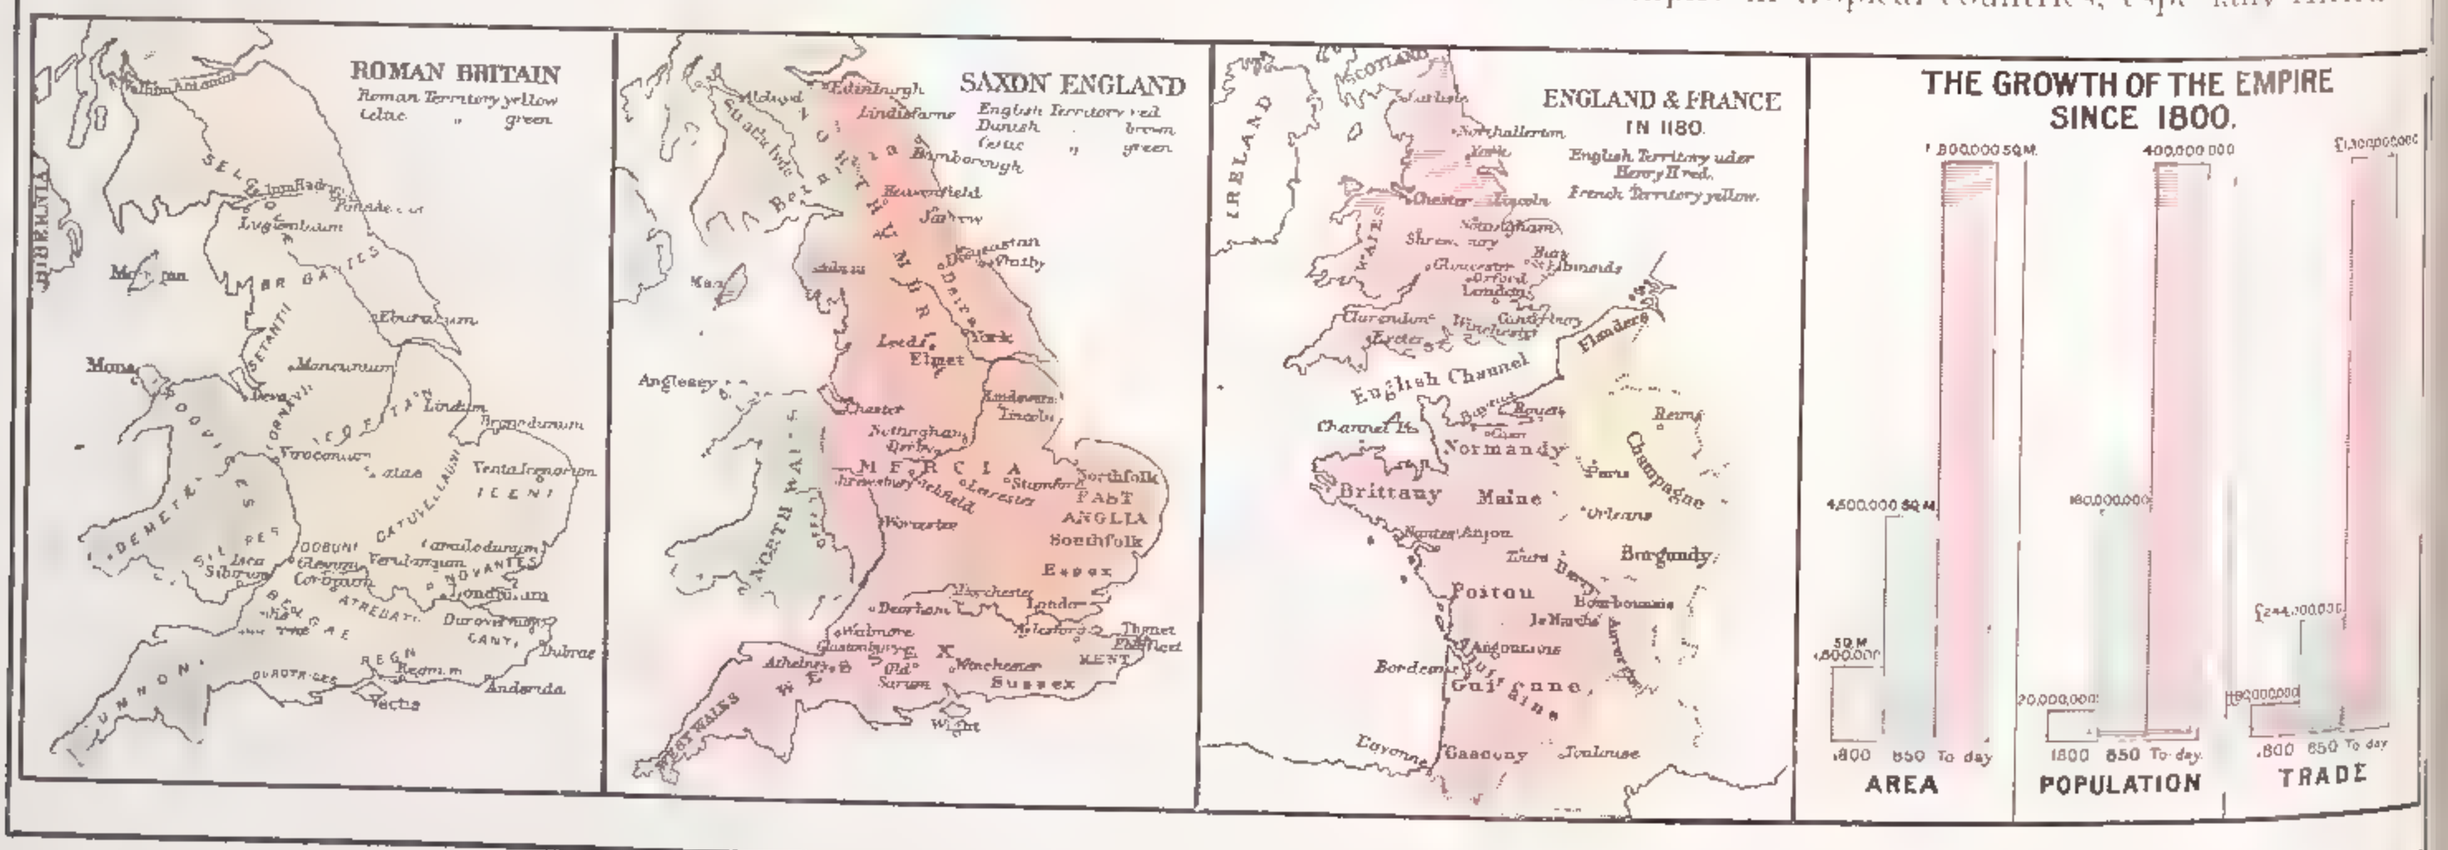
Industries.—The Industries of the United Kingdom give employment to nearly five times the population occupied in agricultural pursuits, the textile factories alone employing over 1,000,000 operatives. They have for the most part grown up round the great coal-fields (see map on page 23), where local causes have led to the springing up of special trades. Cotton spinning has naturally centred round the Manchester district, where the moist and equable climate is adapted to the industry. It lies on the Lancashire coalfield, and is within easy access of the great cotton port of Liverpool. The Woollen Industry owed its origin in W. Yorkshire to the cheap water supply derived from the Ouse and its tributaries, and the natural supply of wool obtainable from the Pennines, while in Leeds and the neighbouring towns its development is largely due to the adjacent coal-fields. Other industrial centres able to command a local supply of coal are the steel and iron manufacturing towns of Sheffield, Birmingham, Middlesborough, the Black Country, Glasgow, and South Wales; the Shipbuilding towns on the Clyde, Tyne and Mersey, and Belfast, Barrow and Middlesborough; the Pottery district of North Staffordshire, and the chemical and glass manufacturing towns of Widnes, St. Helens, Swansea, Glasgow and Newcastle.

Exports.—The comparative value of the exports of the chief industries of the United Kingdom is shown below, and fuller particulars of the total export trade may be found on page 6; of this trade the exports from England and Wales amount to 90·8 per cent., from Scotland to 8·8 per cent., and from Ireland to 0·4 per cent.

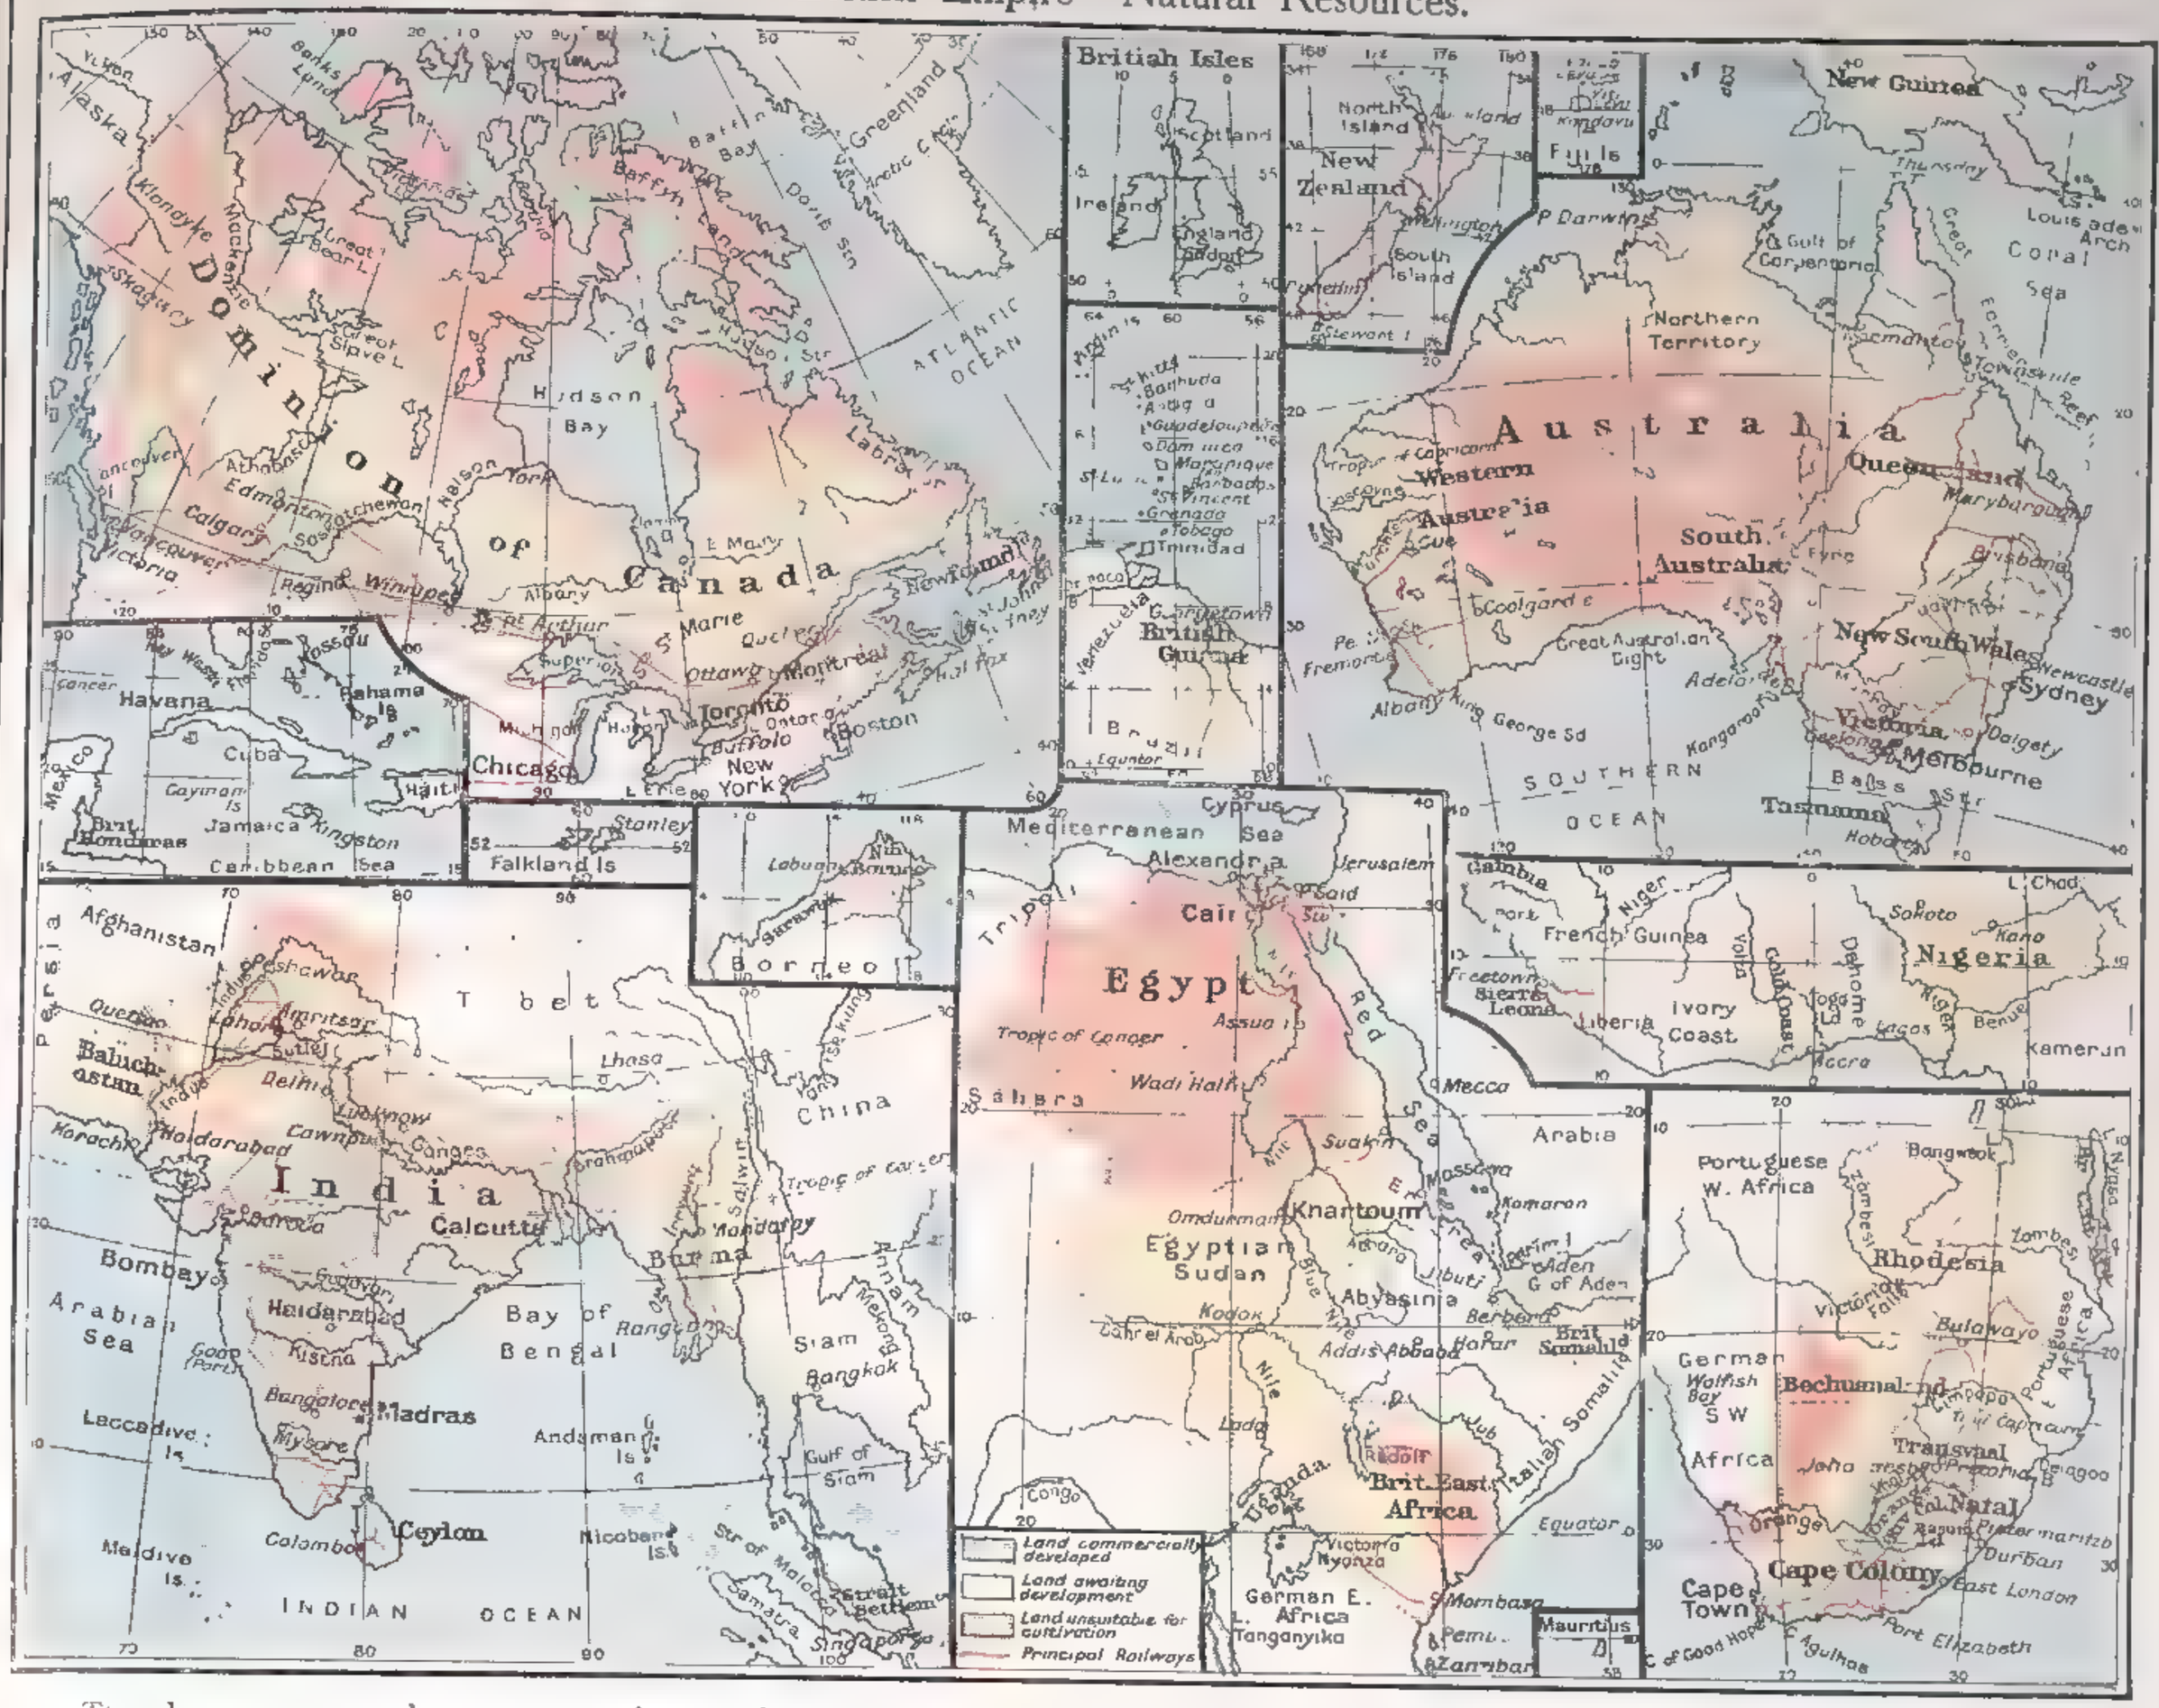
Occupations.—Of the total population of the United Kingdom, 14,953,586, or 56 per cent., consist of wives, children, and others without regular occupation; and of the remainder, 56 per cent. are engaged in industries, 14 in domestic service, 12 in agriculture and fishing, 12 in commerce, and 6 per cent. belong to the professional classes

The Growth of the British Empire.

Down to the end of the XV. century, the geographical position of the British Isles was unfavourable to the growth of a Colonial Empire. Situated on the west flank of Europe, their earliest inhabitants, the ancient Britons, remained outside the influence of the then civilized world, till the Roman Invasion under Julius Cæsar in B.C 55. The effective Roman occupation of Britain lasted from a century later to A.D 411, when the legions were finally withdrawn. The second or Saxon Conquest of Britain began with the landing of Hengist in 449 at Ebbsfleet, in the Isle of Thanet, and after a struggle of over 150 years the last of the Britons were driven into the recesses of the Welsh hills. The last or Norman Conquest of the British Isles resulted in the gradual fusion of the Saxons and Normans into the English race, and in the temporary acquisition of territory in France, which reached its largest extent under Henry II., whose French possessions are shown in the map below. At the end of the XV. century, the discoveries of the New World and the Sea Route to India shifted the centre of the world to the British Isles, and awoke in Englishmen a consciousness of their maritime vocation; the British Empire, therefore, dates from these discoveries the beginning of its history, which may be divided into the four periods shown on the map above. First Period—From the early part of the XVI. Century to 1713.—In this period Newfoundland (the oldest English colony) and New England were settled; Nova Scotia, Hudson Bay, Jamaica and other West Indian Islands, and Gibraltar were acquired; and the first settlements in India and West Africa were made. Second Period—From 1713 to 1815. The chief acquisitions of this period were Canada, Trinidad and Guiana in America, the Cape and Sierra Leone in Africa, Ceylon, a great expansion of territory in India, and the formation of the first settlements in Australia. This period is also noteworthy for the loss of the North American Colonies. Third Period—From 1815 to 1884. Marked by the steady, and, as a rule, peaceful settlement and development of the agricultural colonies in N. America, S. Africa and Australasia, and by the expansion of British power in India. Fourth Period—From 1884 to the Present Day.—Remarkable for an enormous expansion of the British Empire in tropical countries, especially Africa.



The British Empire—Natural Resources.



The above maps are drawn on a uniform scale of 1 : 50,000,000, or 790 miles to the inch. They are coloured to show generally the present Commercial Development of the British Empire. The green tint covers the Commercial and Mining areas opened up by railways and more or less under crops or pasture. The buff tint shows the lands available for settlement, but at present outside the influence of the world's Commerce. The deserts and other dry regions of Egypt and Australia, the tundra lands of Canada, the mountain-regions and other wastes are coloured brown. The railways, shown by red lines, indicate the main lines of traffic in India and the Colonies.

The diagrams given below show the acreage under crops, pasture, forests, etc., in the principal British possessions. The pink tint shows the arable, pastoral, and forest lands actually in occupation, and the blue tint indicates virgin forests, areas not yet settled, and waste lands unfit for cultivation. Most of the pastoral runs in the Australian Commonwealth could support a much greater number of sheep than are at present pastured on them. It is estimated that about a third of the area of Canada is suitable for agriculture, but much of this area is still covered with virgin forest. In the United Kingdom about thirteen and a half million acres still lie waste.

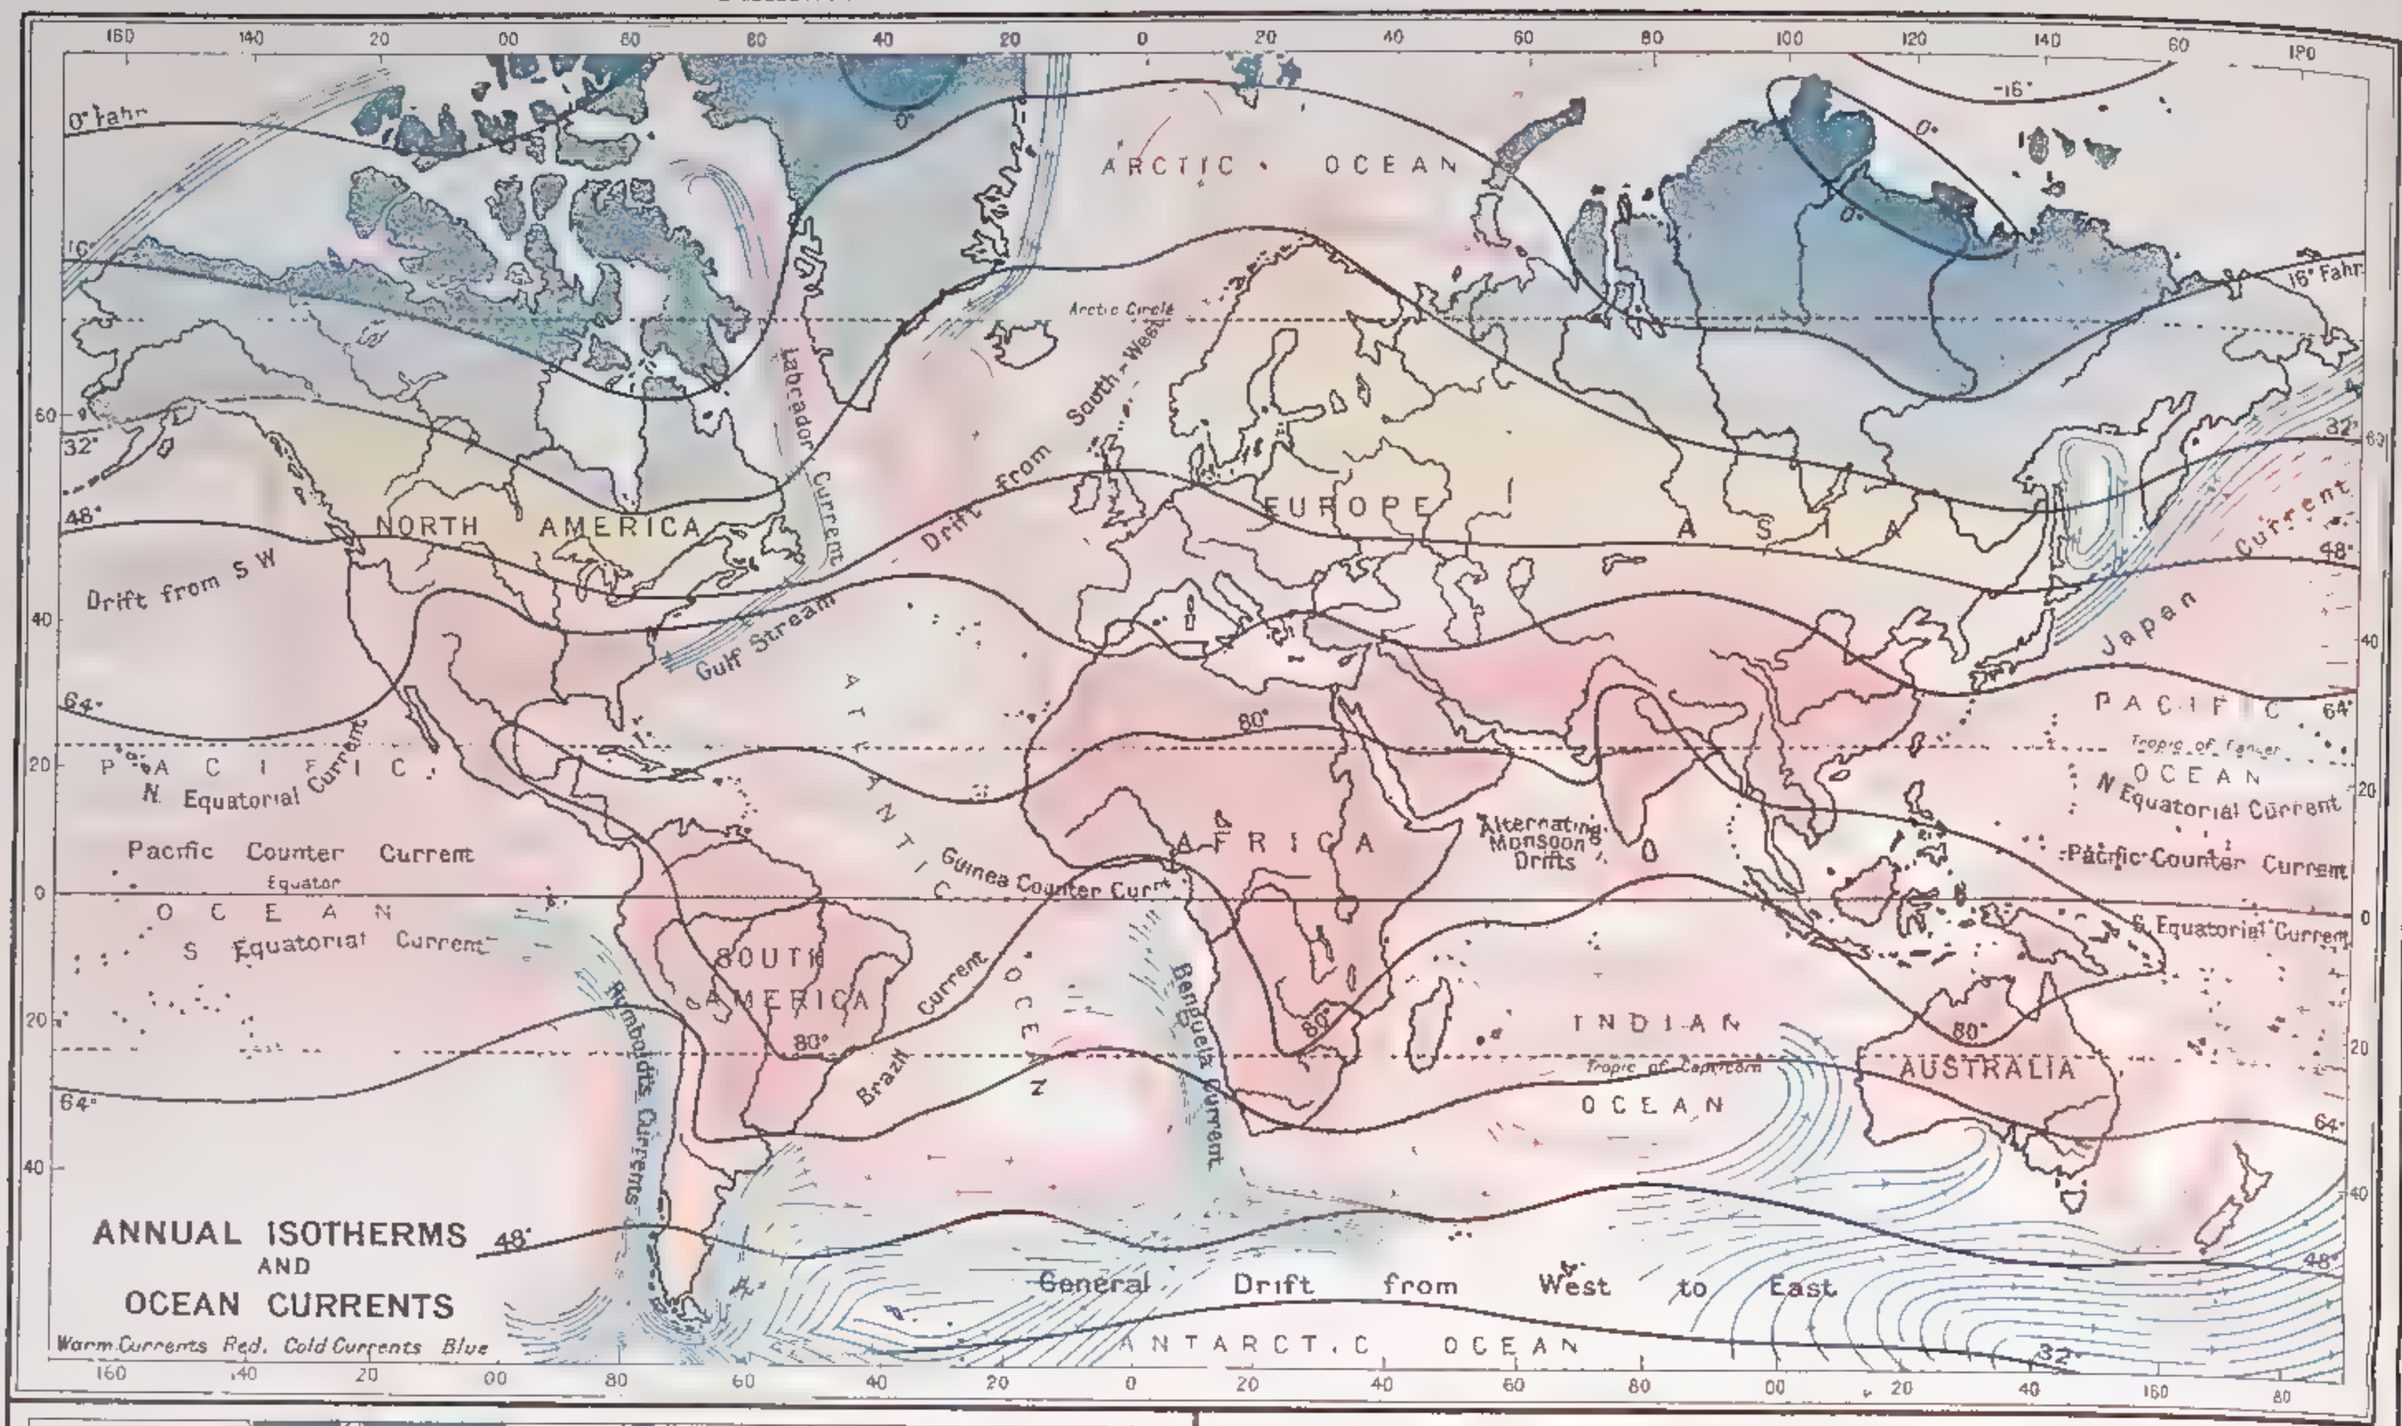
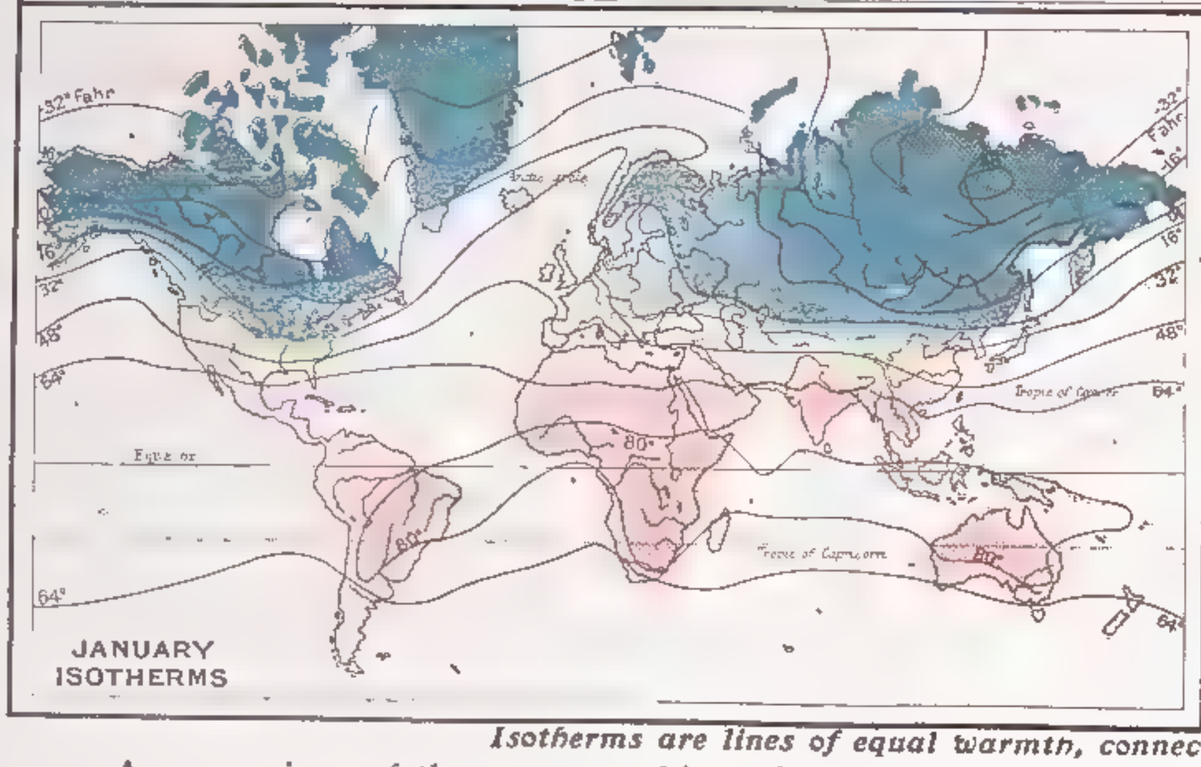
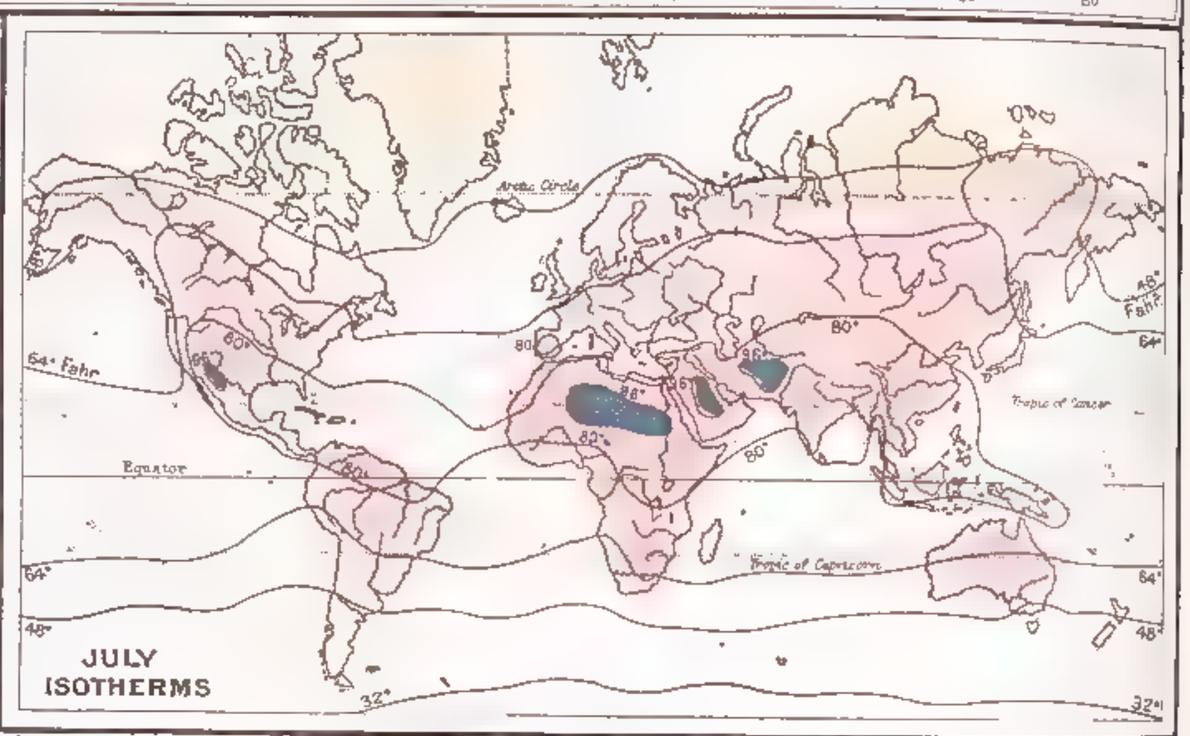
Climate in Relation to Commercial Products.







Isotherms are lines of equal warmth, connecting places of a corresponding temperature.

A comparison of the maps on this and the opposite page will show how largely Climatic Conditions determine the distribution and character of Vegetable Life. The climate or average Weather of a region varies according to its Latitude, its Elevation above Sea-level, and its Distance from the Sea. Latitude is the chief Climatic factor. It determines the amount of direct heat received from the sun, and the duration of day and night throughout the year. The hottest regions, therefore, lie within the Torrid Zone, extending 22½° N. and S. of the Equator, to the Tropics of Cancer and Capricorn. Somewhere within this zone the sun is always right overhead and, therefore, day and night remain constantly of an equal length. The average annual temperature of the Torrid Zone, is over 70°, and so, where the rainfall is copious, we find within it regions of dense, evergreen, tropical forest or jungle, such as those of Central Africa or the basin of the Amazon. North and South of the Torrid Zone, and reaching to the Polar Circles, lie the North and South Temperate Zones. In these Zones the nearer we approach the poles, the colder becomes the climate, and the greater the difference in the range of temperature and the respective lengths of day and night at the opposite seasons of the year. Woodlands and arable lands are generally characteristic of the Temperate Zones, but towards their equatorial limits lie vast rainless regions, forming belts of desert, in both northern and southern hemispheres.

The Frigid Zones stretch from the Arctic and Antarctic Circles respectively to the Poles. Regions of low temperature, with long and excessively cold winters, and short, though comparatively warm, summers, their day and night vary in length, from twenty-four hours at the Polar Circles to six months at the Poles. In the Northern Frigid Zone lie the vast boggy plains, known as Tundra, of Arctic America and Northern Asia, frozen the greater part of the year, and only covered during the brief summer by a sparse vegetation of mosses and lichens.

Elevation.—Temperature decreases, at an average rate of 1° with each additional rise of 270 feet above sea-level, and therefore the ascent of a mountainous district brings us to successive zones of climate, similar to those we should meet in a journey from the Equator to the Poles. Thus we find the upper slopes of lofty mountains with an Alpine flora, corresponding to that of the Arctic Regions, even in the neighbourhood of the Equator. This cooling of the temperature with increasing elevation drains rain-bearing winds of their moisture, and hence mountainous districts are usually regions of the most abundant rainfall.

The Sea exercises a varied influence upon climate. It is the source whence the moisture of the air, which falls as rain, snow or dew, is derived. It retains a more constant temperature than land surfaces, and therefore maritime countries, and especially islands, enjoy as a rule a more equable climate than inland regions. Lastly, its surface movements, or warm and cold currents, tend to raise or lower the temperature. The action of currents in determining climate is well illustrated on the Chart of the January Isotherms, where the remarkable northward bend of the Isotherm of 32° is due entirely to the influence of the warm Gulf Stream.

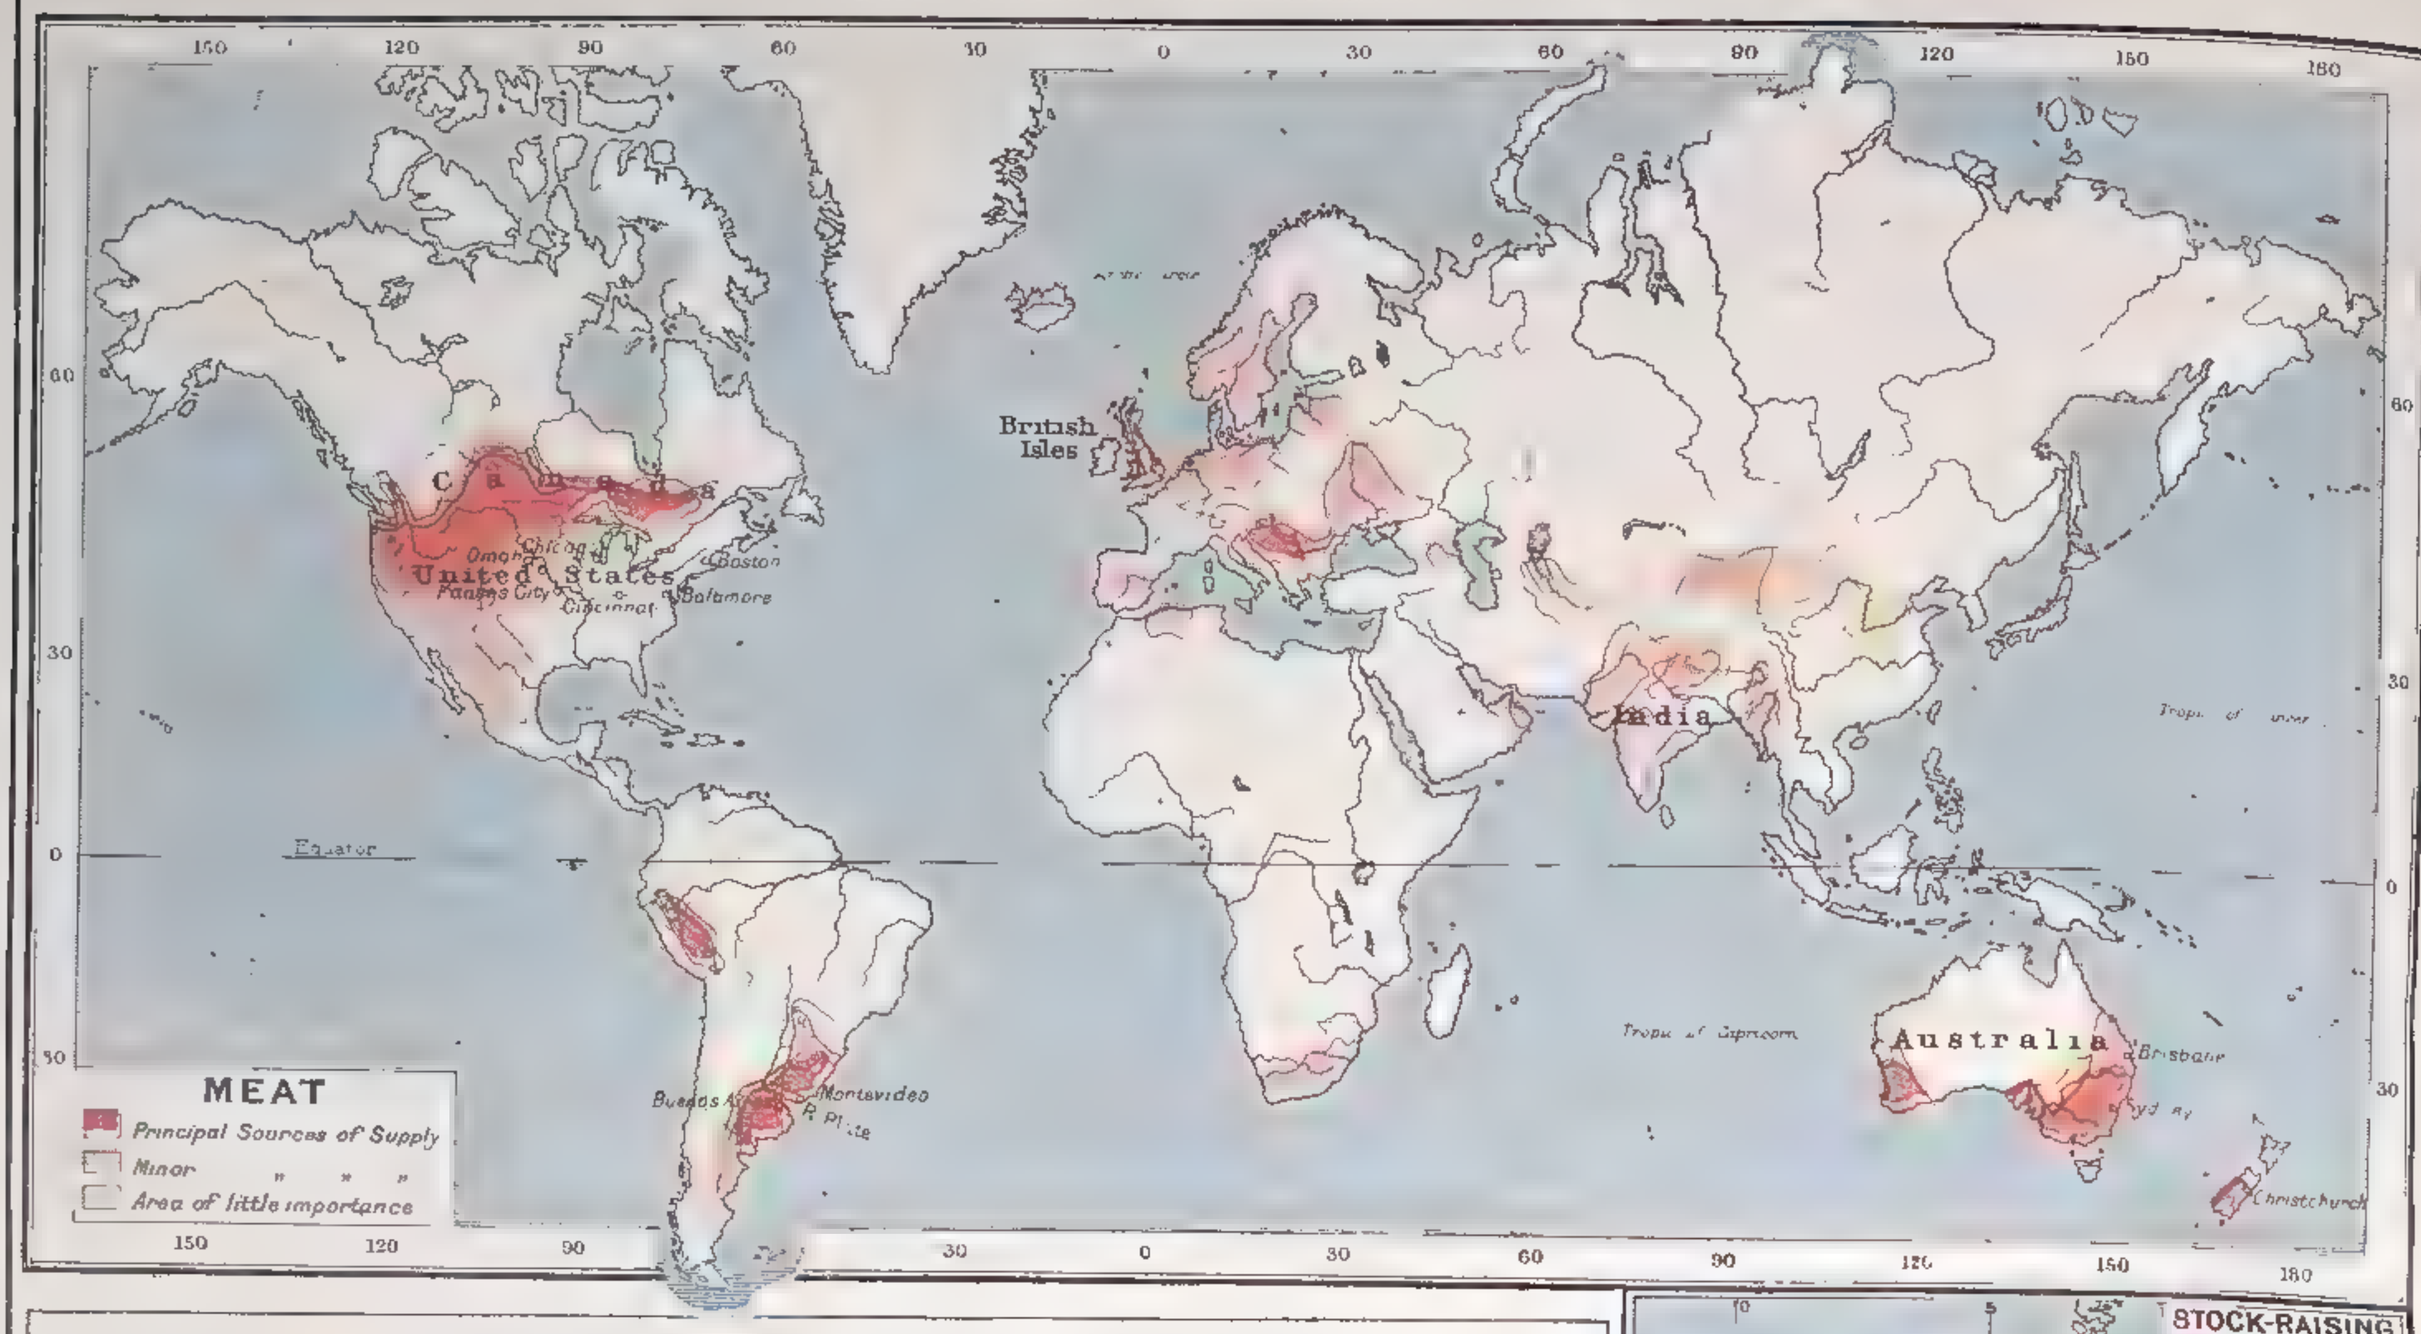
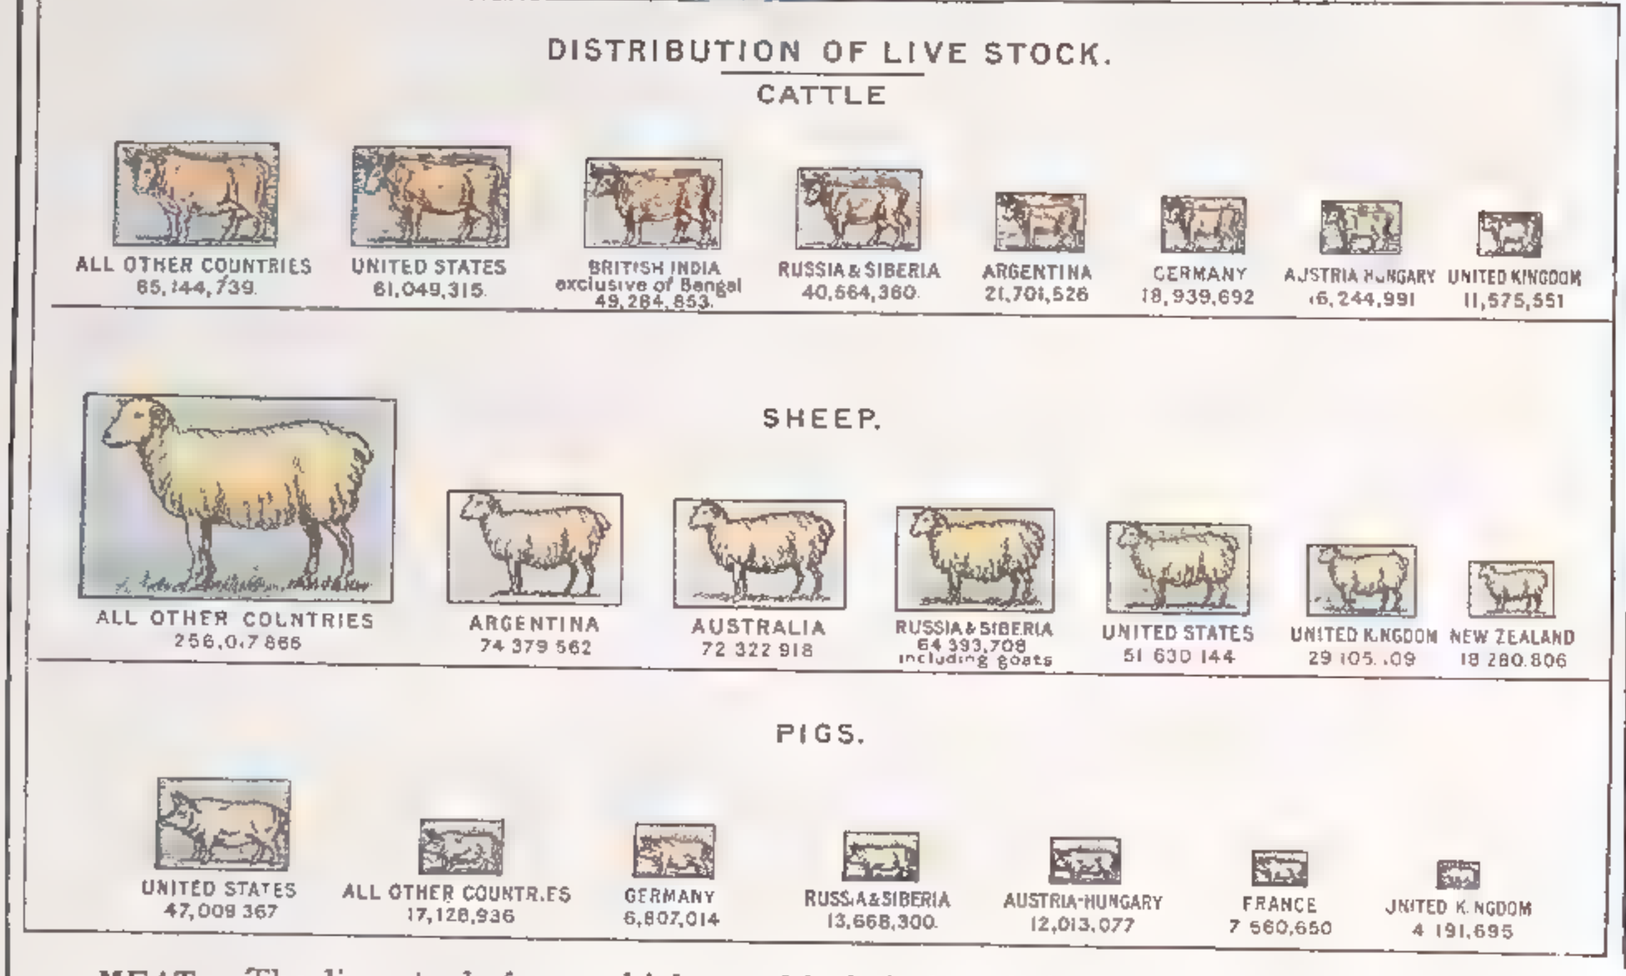
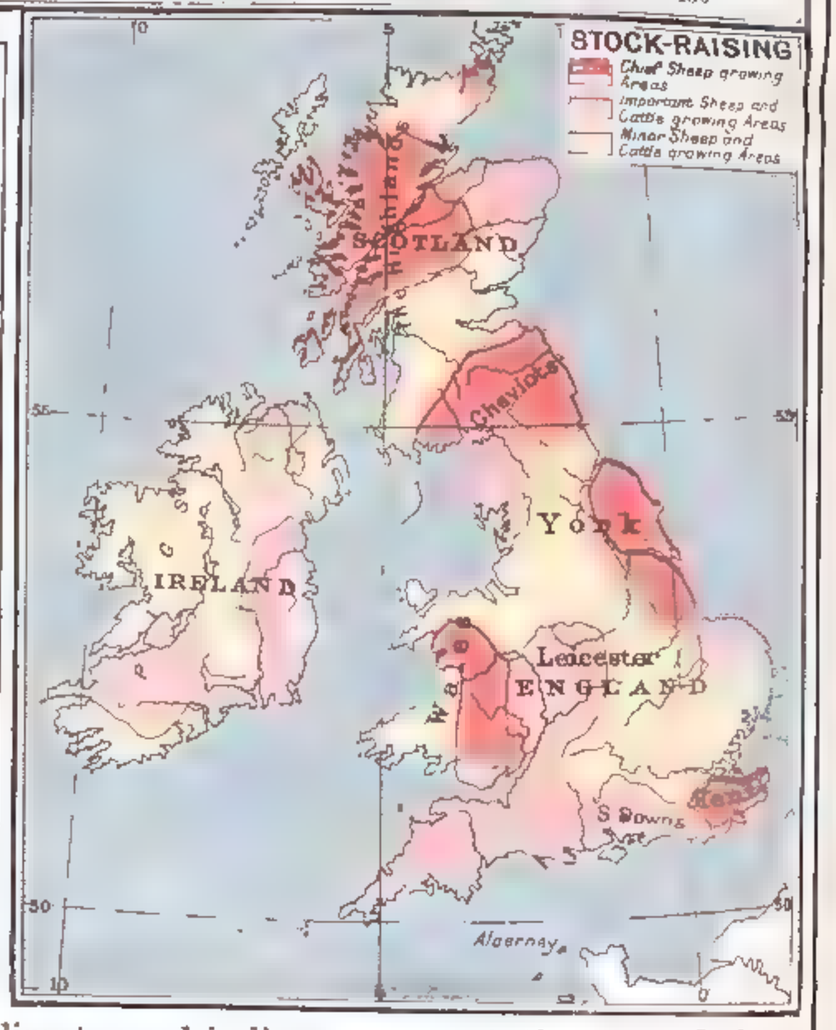
The World's Commodities.—1. Meat.



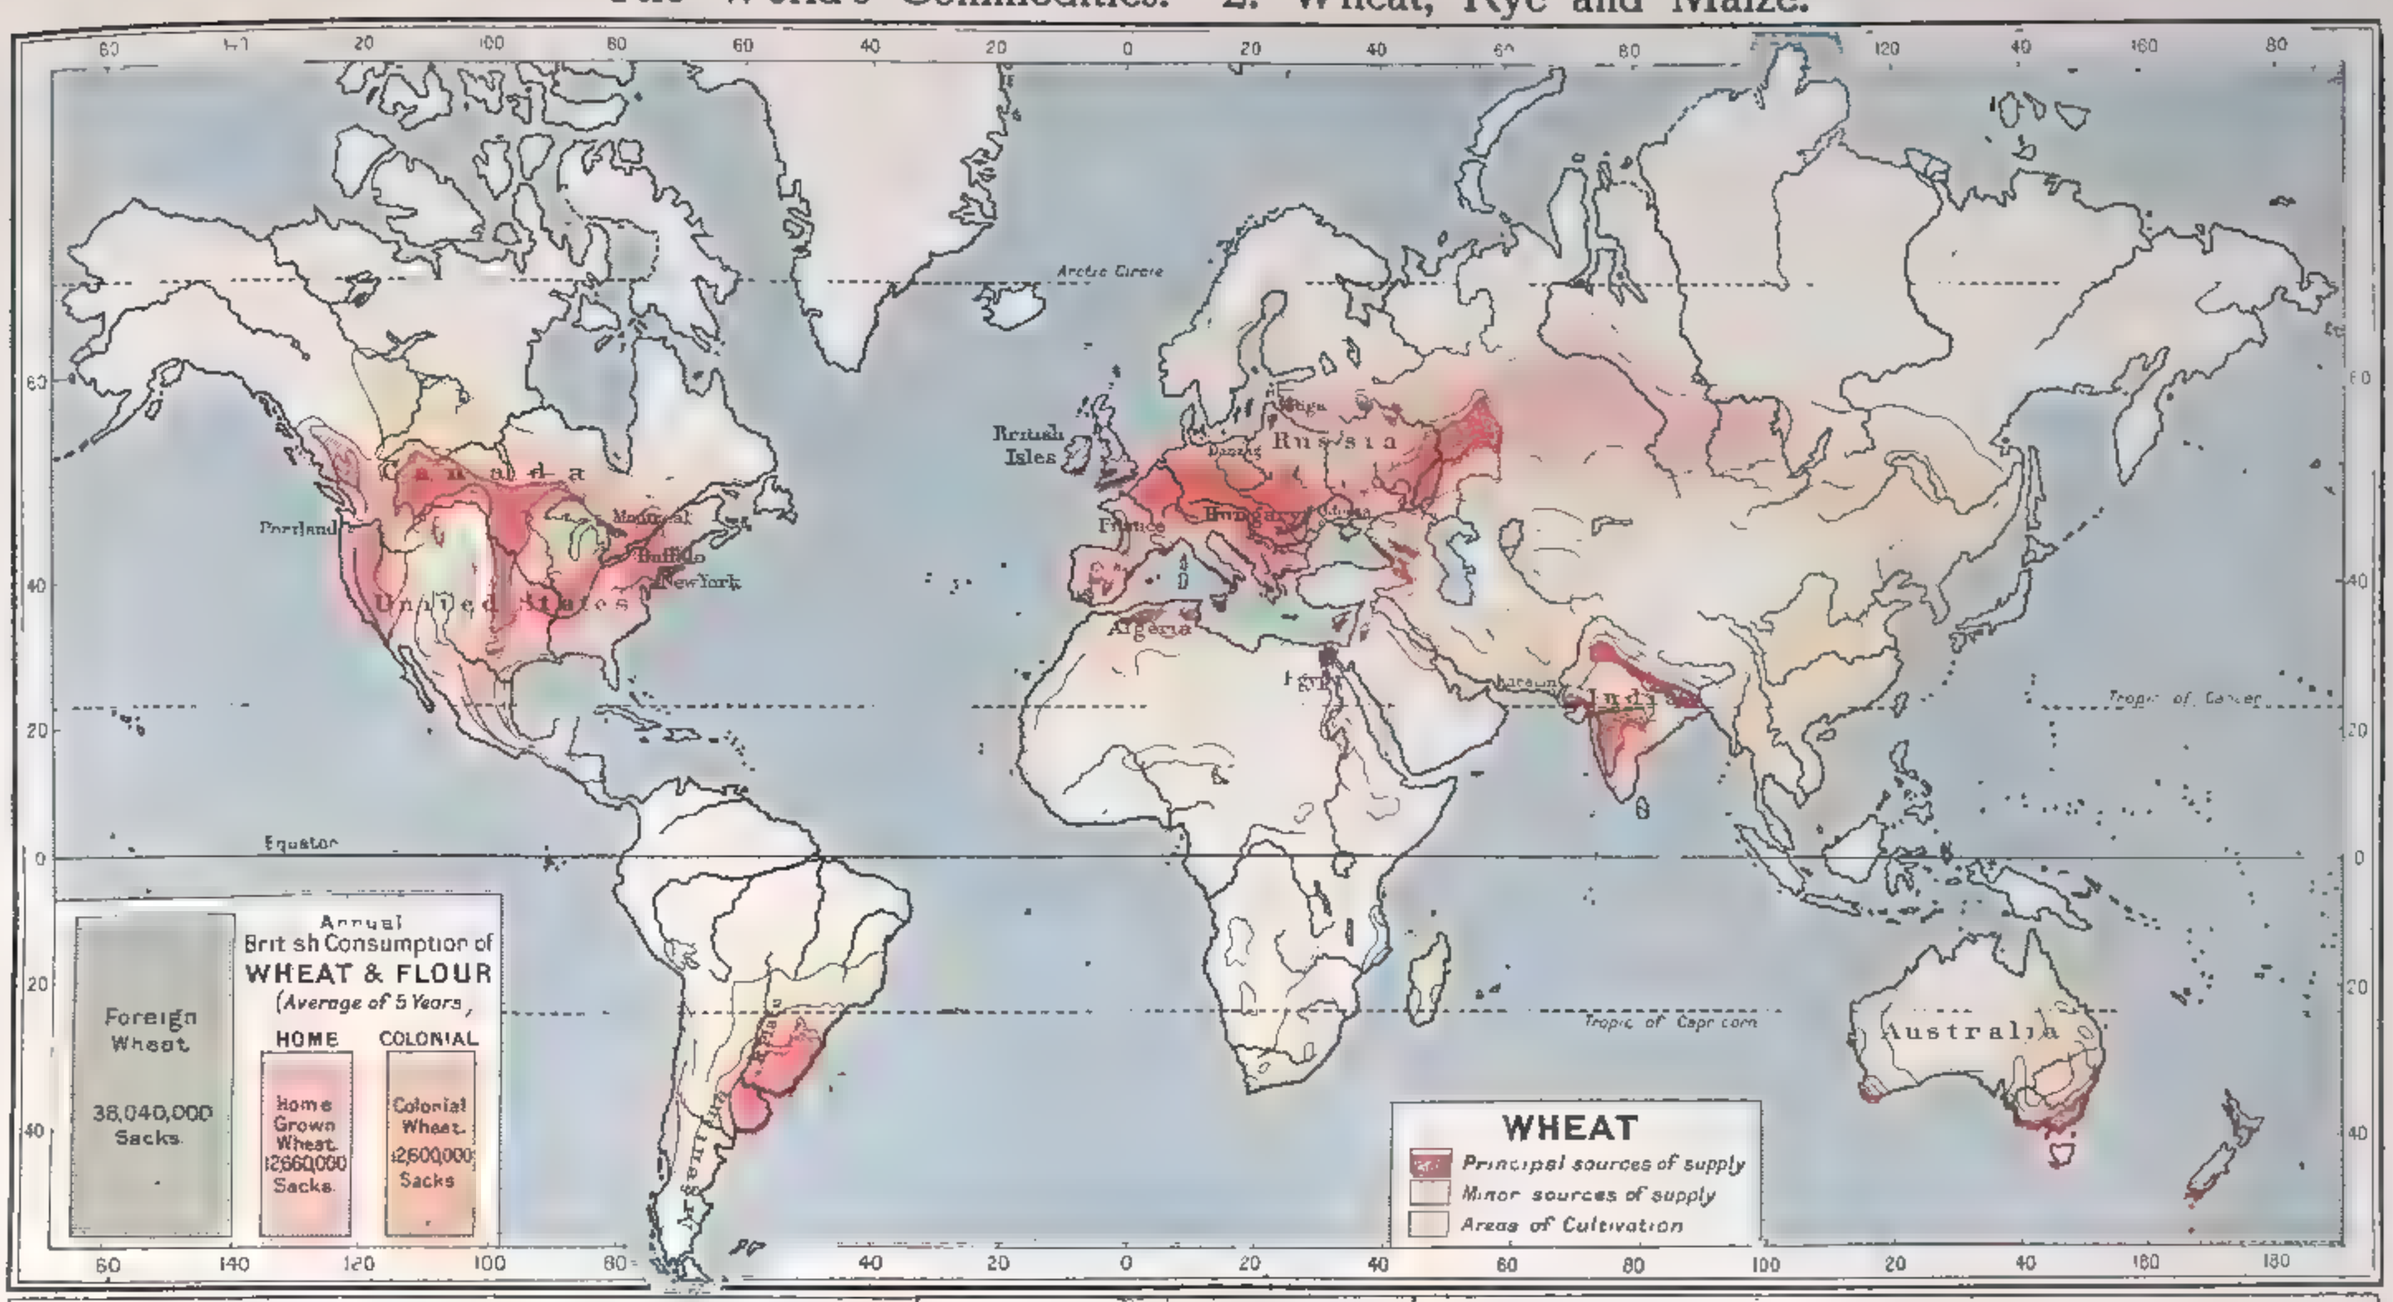




MEAT.—The live-stock from which mankind derive their supply of meat is reared throughout practically the whole world, although the countries able to export any large supply after satisfying their own domestic wants are comparatively few, and it is these only that are indicated on the above map. It is noteworthy that the principal meat-producing countries are largely undeveloped, and the flocks and herds which they now maintain might be multiplied many times before their pastoral resources were exhausted.

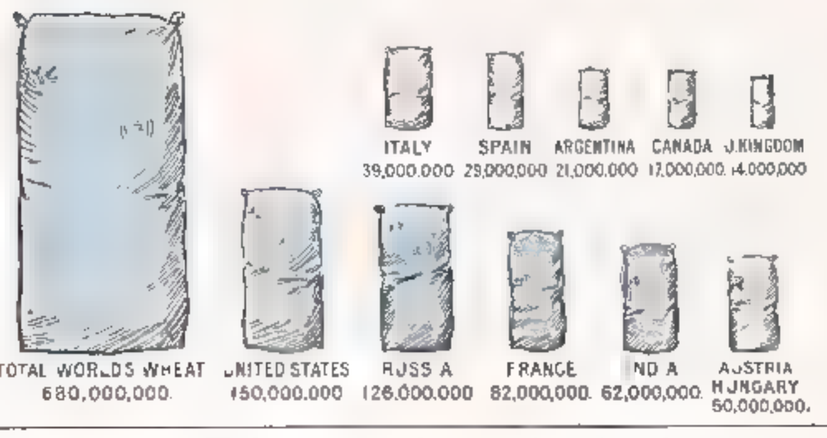
Sources of Supply.—The Western States of America, on which the meat industry of Chicago depends. The American meat trade has grown very rapidly, and American cattle companies are beginning to establish themselves over the Mexican border. River Plate District.—Lying north of this river, and embracing Uruguay, Paraguay, and Rio Grande do Sul, is a vast extent of land largely available for cattle-rearing. Its chief meat product is a coarse salt-dried beef, known locally as "tasajo" and in Brazil as "xarque." As this region develops, however, the quality of the live-stock is improved, so as to produce fresh meat for export to Europe, instead of dried beef for other South American and West Indian markets. In the Argentine Republic on the S. side of the R. Plate, the quality of the meat has already been greatly improved. Sheep-rearing is even more important in Argentina than cattle-rearing—the natural grass of the pampa-lands, especially in the districts lying between Buenos Ayres and Bahia Blanca, providing suitable pasture for the flocks. Australia.—The soil, climate and indigenous vegetation are admirably suited to the live-stock industry. Captain MacArthur first showed in New South Wales that Australia could produce an excellent wool, and since then, as the exploration of the interior was pushed forward, pastoralists followed with their sheep and cattle, and to-day the pastoral industry forms the chief element of the wealth of the country. The area of South Australia suitable for sheep farming is limited, and it has nearly attained its fullest development. In Victoria sheep farming has a strong rival in agriculture, which has made rapid strides. Australia is the chief source of supply of Merino wool, and her flocks are therefore more important as a wool-producing, than as a mutton, breed. Cattle breeding is of less importance than sheep-rearing in all the Australian States except Queensland, not because cattle cannot be profitably reared in the country, but because sheep rearing is more remunerative. The periodical droughts have also tended to discourage the expansion of the cattle industry. In New Zealand, the recent development of the dairy industry has stimulated cattle-rearing considerably. The frozen mutton trade, which had its beginning in 1882, finds its best market in Great Britain. There are some twenty-one meat-freezing works in the main islands, with a capacity for treating about 4,000,000 sheep per annum. Several Australian States (especially New South Wales) are beginning to engage in the frozen meat trade. In 1906 the imports of meat into the United Kingdom were valued at £51,058,649.

The World's Commodities.—2. Wheat, Rye and Maize.



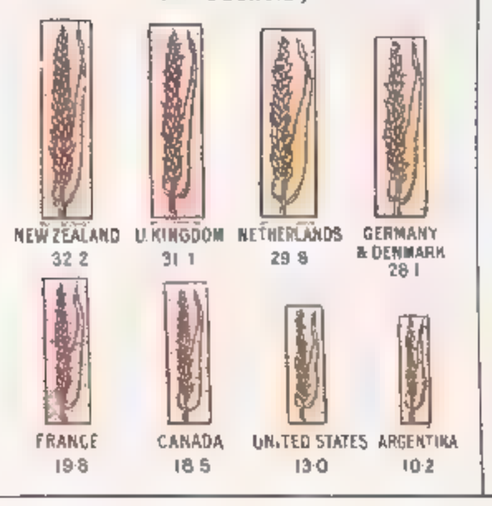
WORLD'S ANNUAL WHEAT PRODUCTION.

(Average of 5 years)
(in sacks)



AVERAGE YIELD PER ACRE

(in bushels)



VALUE OF BRITISH IMPORTS OF WHEAT & FLOUR

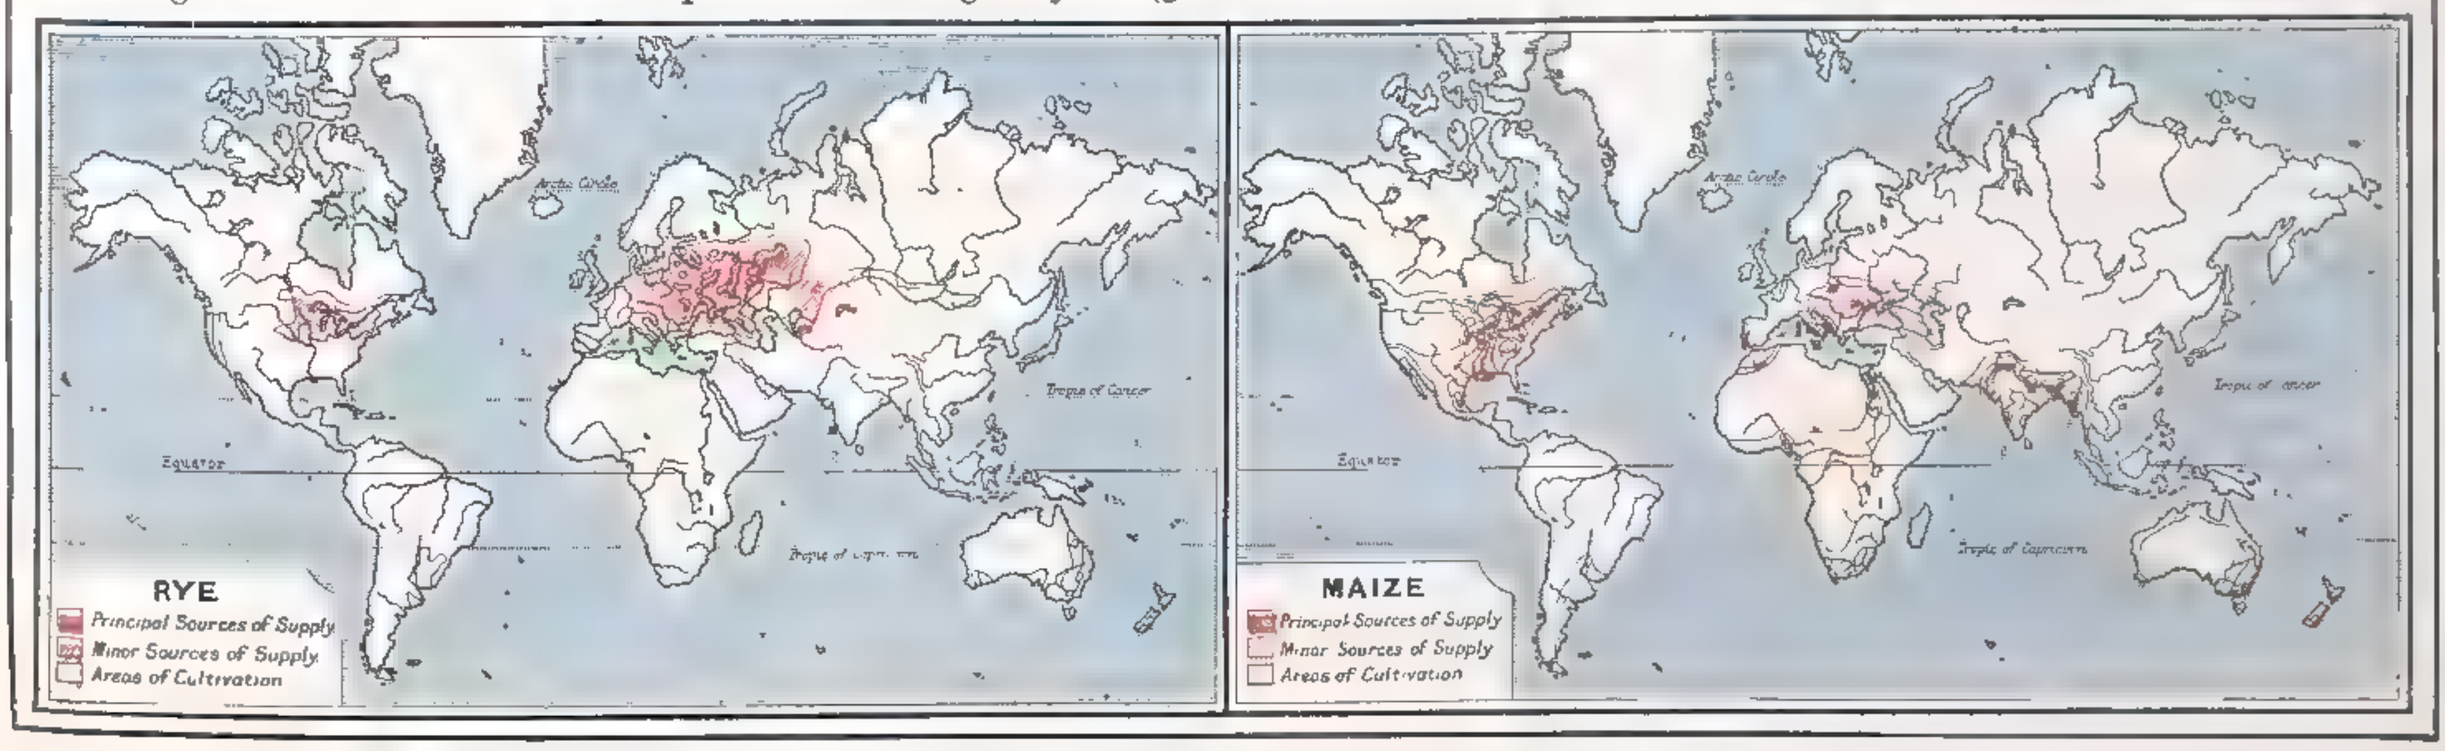
WHEAT (Triticum vulgare) is simply a grass improved by centuries of cultivation. Grown throughout the temperate zones, it thrives best on warm dry plains, with a soil stiff enough to support the plant and retain the moisture, though, being deep rooted, it suffers less than most cereals from drought. As an article of food wheat is second in importance only to rice, and forms the staple foodstuff of all civilized peoples. American wheats are exceptionally hard because of the fine, dry climate, and this feature has led to the general introduction of roller mills, which produce a whiter, though less easily digested, flour than the old mill stones. Hungarian wheat produces the finest flour.

Chief Sources of Supply: The principal wheat areas of the world are in Russia and the United States, sometimes the one and sometimes the other country yielding the larger crop. The latest official estimates from the whole of the 72 Governments of the Russian Empire represent 83,000,000 quarters, the United States wheat crop being 84,000,000 quarters and that of the British Empire 65,000,000 quarters. France and Algeria follow with 40,500,000 quarters, Austria-Hungary with under 25 million quarters. No other country produces an aggregate of 20 million quarters, though Argentina is fast approaching this figure. Of the 110 million acres under wheat in Europe much more than half is to be found in Russia, Hungary and the Danubian States. In the diagram of British imports of wheat (given above), the United States output is abnormally low, owing to a bad harvest in 1905. In the United Kingdom there is a steady decrease in the area devoted to wheat. Although nowhere for an area of equal size is so high a yield (31 bushels per acre) obtained as in Great Britain, the cost of production is too heavy to allow the United Kingdom to compete successfully in wheat growing with countries like the United States and Canada, with their smaller yields per acre, where land is comparatively cheap and more economic methods of cultivation and transport are employed.

Grain Routes: American wheat and flour are sent down the Hudson and St. Lawrence, or transported by canal or rail to New York, Boston, Portland and Montreal, and thence shipped to Europe: increasing quantities are also exported viâ the Pacific Ports to the Far East. Wheat grown in the Danube Valley is floated down to Braila or Galatz, or finds an outlet through Fiume. Odessa, Kherson and Taganrog are the Russian wheat ports on the Black Sea, and Riga and Danzig on the Baltic. Indian wheat is exported viâ Karachi, Australian viâ Sydney, Melbourne and Adelaide, and South American viâ the River Plate.

RYE is grown on soils too poor or too exposed for the successful cultivation of wheat, and is used for bread-making by the poorer classes in North and Central Europe. Whisky is distilled from it in the United States, gin in Holland, and vodka in Russia: 83 per cent. of the estimated total production is grown in Russia and Germany, and it is also cultivated in Ireland.

MAIZE (or "Corn," as it is termed in America,) requires more heat and moisture than wheat, but it is of less feeding value. The total area under maize throughout the world is estimated at 129,600,000 acres, of which 94,000,000 acres are in the United States, where it is largely used for feeding pigs. In this country maize flour is sold under the trade description "Corn Flour."



The World's Commodities.—3. Rice, Oats, Barley and Cocoa.

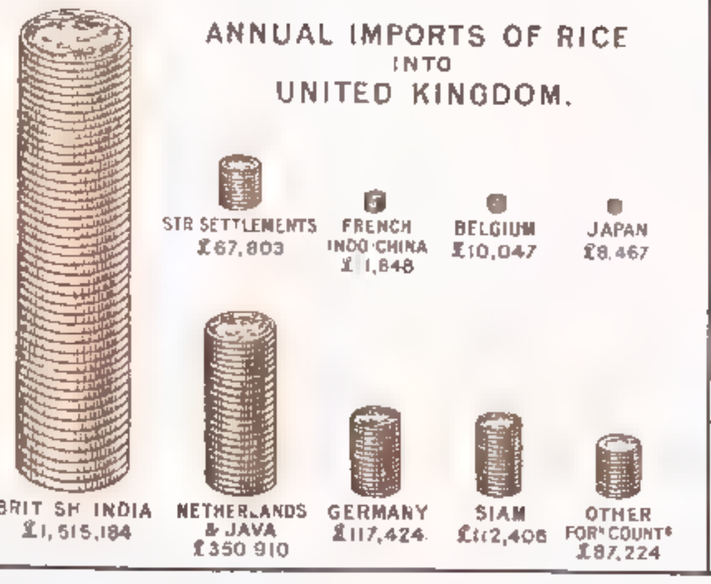
RICE, the seed of a cereal grass (Oryza sativa), is cultivated in low-lying land in the Tropics, requiring great heat and moisture. Starch forms its chief constituent, giving it its nutritious value; and it forms the staple food-stuff of one-third of the human race. The indigenous "water oat," or Canadian wild rice (Zizania aquatica), of North America is much used for food by the Red Indians. No exact estimate of the world's production can be given, but it is the staple article of culture in S.E. Asia, and the humid coastlands of S. United States. The annual crop, exclusive of S. China, is estimated at 28½ million tons. Chief sources of supply are British India, with an annual output of 22,000,000 tons, of which Bengal supplies 16,000,000 tons—the Ganges Delta being the chief rice-growing district Madras 3,000,000 tons, and Burma 3,200,000 tons, of which four-fifths is exported to India and other countries. Japan, with an annual crop of 5,000,000 tons, grown chiefly on the W. coast. United States, with a production of 565,000 tons in 1904, grown mainly in Louisiana and Texas, but also in N. and S. Carolina, Georgia and Florida, is becoming an important rice grower, though the 1905 crop fell below 400,000 tons. The value of the United States rice exports has risen from £3,300 in 1895 to nearly £400,000 in 1905. French Indo-China (in the lower Mekong valley)—annual output about 500,000 tons. Siam (where the whole prosperity of the country depends upon the rice crop) annually exports 450,000 tons. S. China, grown in the river valleys, from the coast to Yun-nan. Italy (in Lombardy and N. Sicily), annual output of 712,000 tons. Minor sources of supply are Austria, Mexico (18,000 tons), Brazil (7,000), Uruguay, Lower Egypt, N. Coast of Madagascar, S.W. Arabia, and the East Indies, especially Borneo.

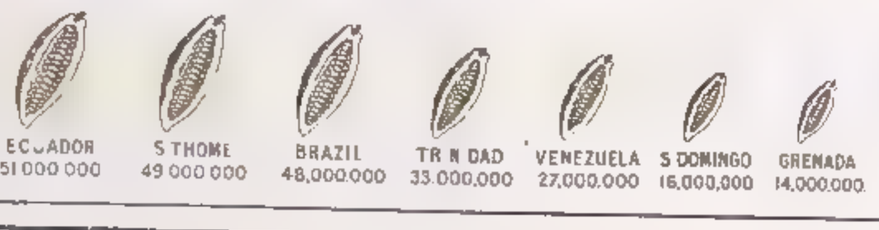
SAGO, the seed of the Sagus (order, Palmaceae) a species of palm, consisting, like arrowroot, tapioca and allied species, almost entirely of starch. It is cultivated in the E. Indies (Borneo, Celebes, Ceram, Java (west coast), the Malaysian Native States, and British New Guinea.

BARLEY, used almost entirely for the manufacture of malt, from which whisky and beer are made, except in Scandinavia, where barley bread is the staple food-stuff. In Europe it is grown in Russia, Germany, Austria, France, Italy, Spain, Scandinavia, and Great Britain, where 1,872,000 acres are under crop, the annual British output being 57,000,000 bushels (47,000,000 in England). The largest crops are grown in the eastern counties and Shropshire in England, and in Forfar in Scotland, the best barley being used in brewing, and inferior qualities for feeding pigs. In the United States California is the chief producer, but it is also grown in Ohio, Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin.

OATS flourish in colder and damper climates than wheat. In Scotland and Ireland they are largely used as a foodstuff, but elsewhere chiefly as food for horses. Of the total annual production of oats over one-fourth, or 114,000,000 quarters, are grown in the United States, chiefly in Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Nebraska. Russia produces 85 million quarters, Germany 51, France 32, the United Kingdom 21, Canada 16, and Austria 13 millions.

COCOA (properly Cacao) is indigenous to tropical America, but its cultivation has spread throughout the tropics. Chief sources of supply are Ecuador, San Thomé (G. of Guinea) and Brazil; minor sources are Trinidad and Venezuela. The consumption of cocoa increases more rapidly than that of tea or coffee, having doubled in the last decade. Its consumption per head of the population is greater in some countries than that of Tea—notably in Holland, France and Germany; owing probably to the development of the chocolate and similar trades in which cocoa is largely used.





The World's Commodities.—4. Tea and Coffee.

The TEA plant (Ternstromiaceae) is indigenous to China and Assam. The chief species are Thea bohea, Thea viridis, and the Assam variety, Thea assamica. In China the plants grow 3 ft. to 5 ft. high, with a bushy stem and numerous leafy branches. In Assam they grow 20 ft. high. Warm, moist, and equable climates, with a copious rainfall, suit tea best, and it is grown as far N. as Japan, and as far S as Natal. Its cultivation in China dates back to ancient times. In 1826 the industry was started in Java, and about 1836 in Assam, whence it gradually spread through India, which is now the leading tea-exporting country. The important Ceylon tea industry was started only 20 years ago. China is the greatest tea producer, and until 1904, was the largest exporter also. The annual crop produced is estimated at 2,000 million lbs.; the rest of the world's consumption exceeding 600 millions. Tea grows all over China, but the exports come from the S.E. provinces, and are exported in three forms—black, green, and brick tea. Japan. With a crop of nearly 55 million lbs. (80 per cent. of which is exported), Japan remains the fourth largest producer, though the production is decreasing. In Java the crop has increased from less than 10½ million lbs. in 1898, to 23½ million lbs. at the present time. Formosa.—"Oolong" tea represents four-fifths of the total crop of 20 to 24 million lbs., and is nearly all exported. Natal (5,000 acres) has an output of nearly 2 million lbs., and Trans-Caucasia, nearly 1 million lbs.

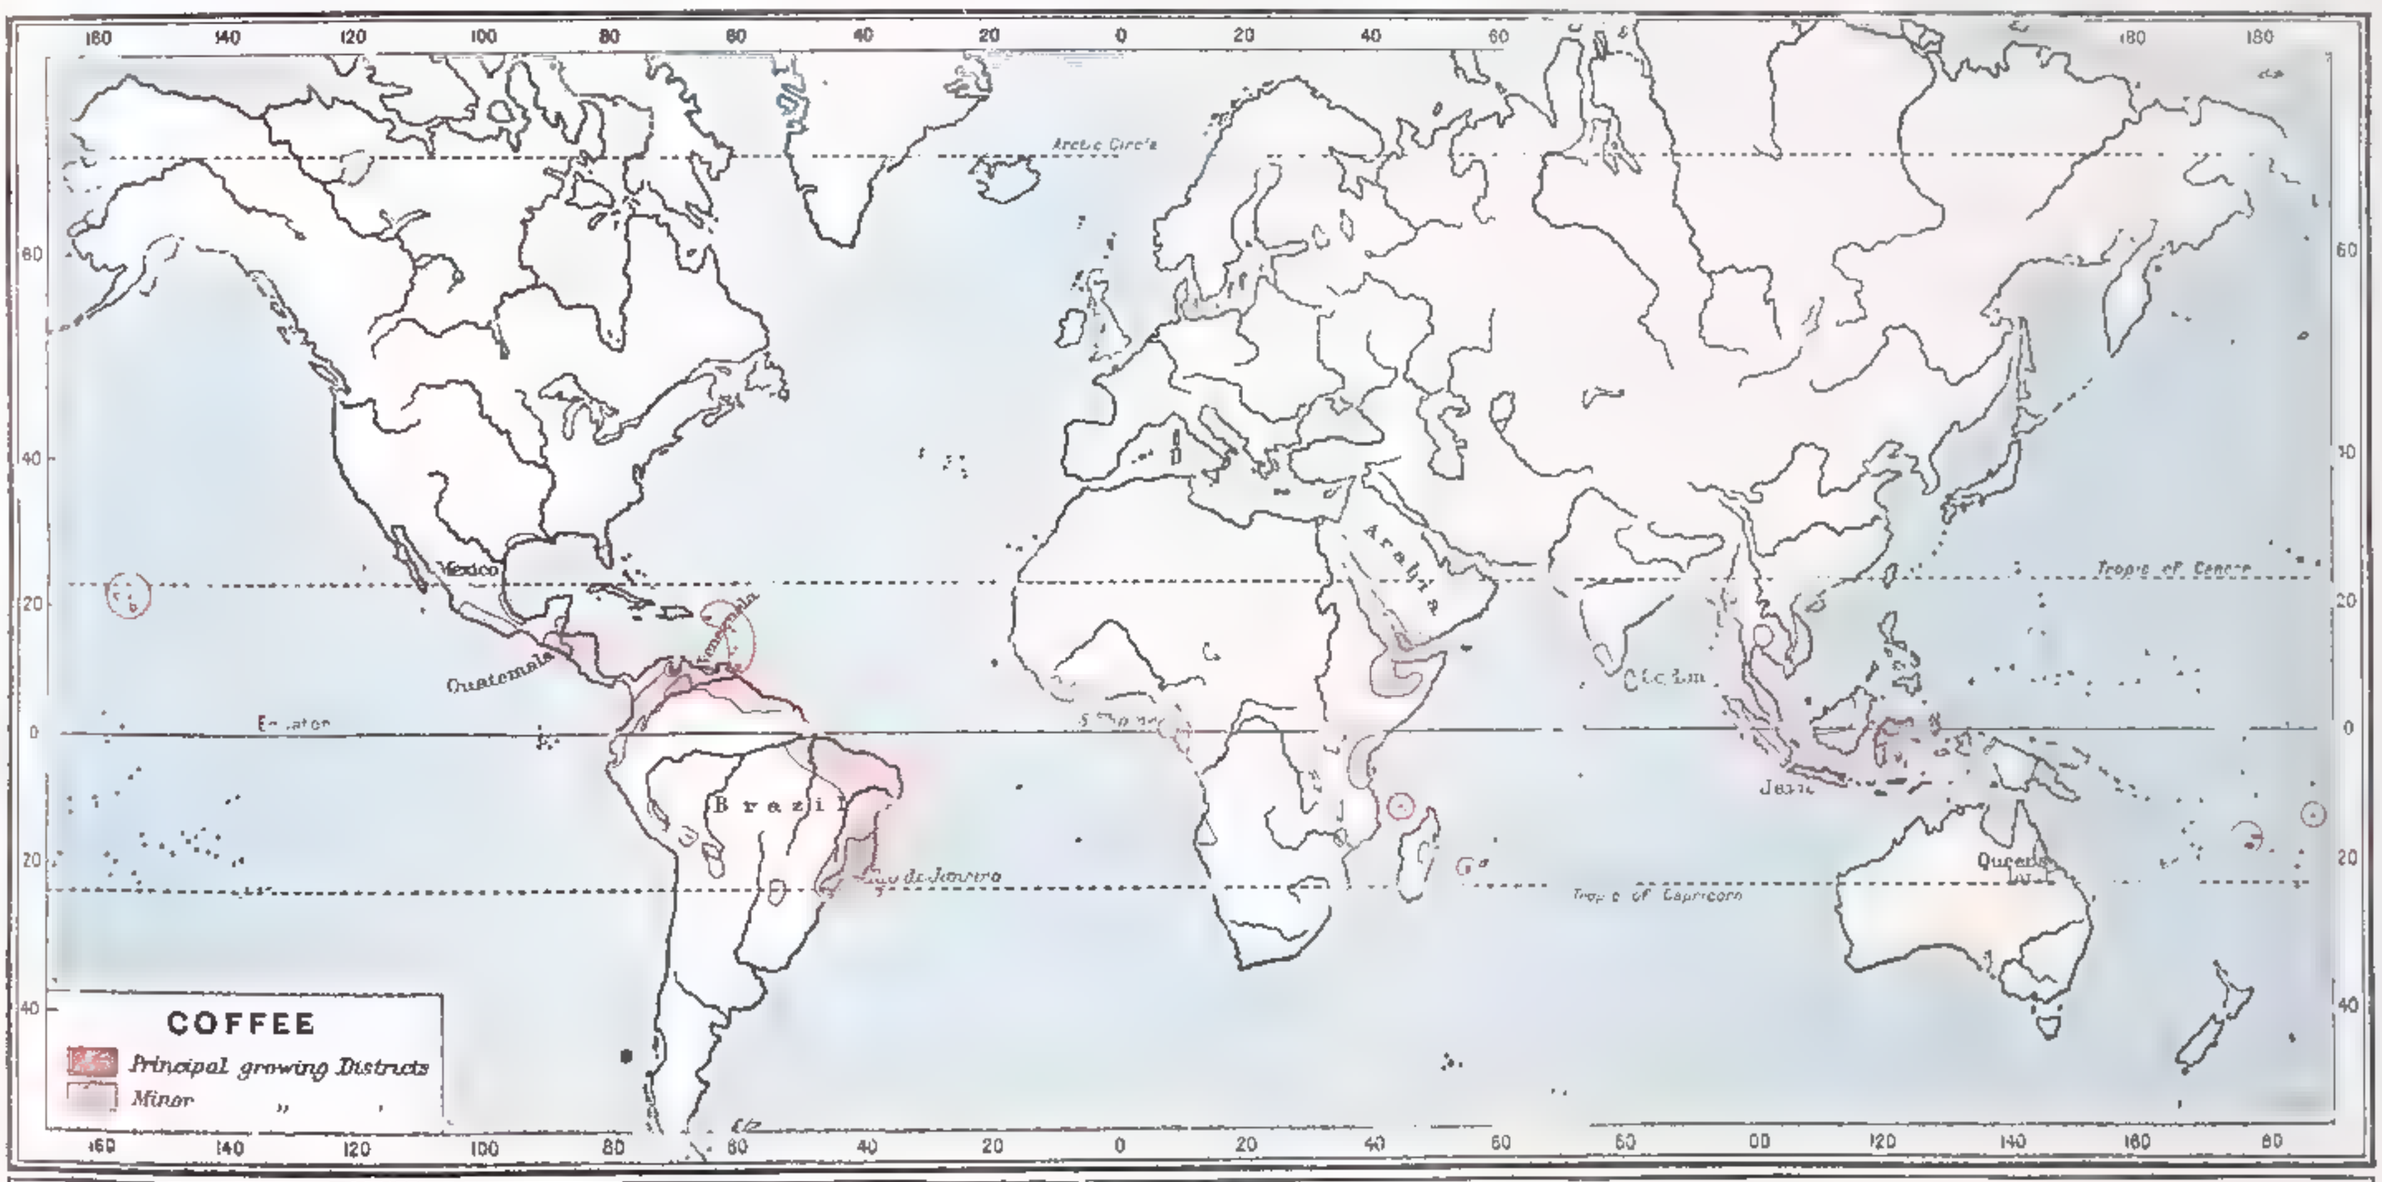
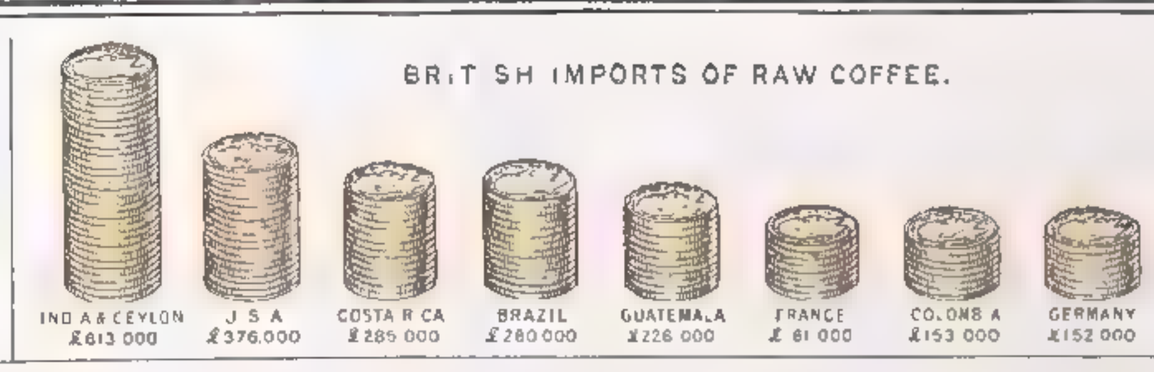
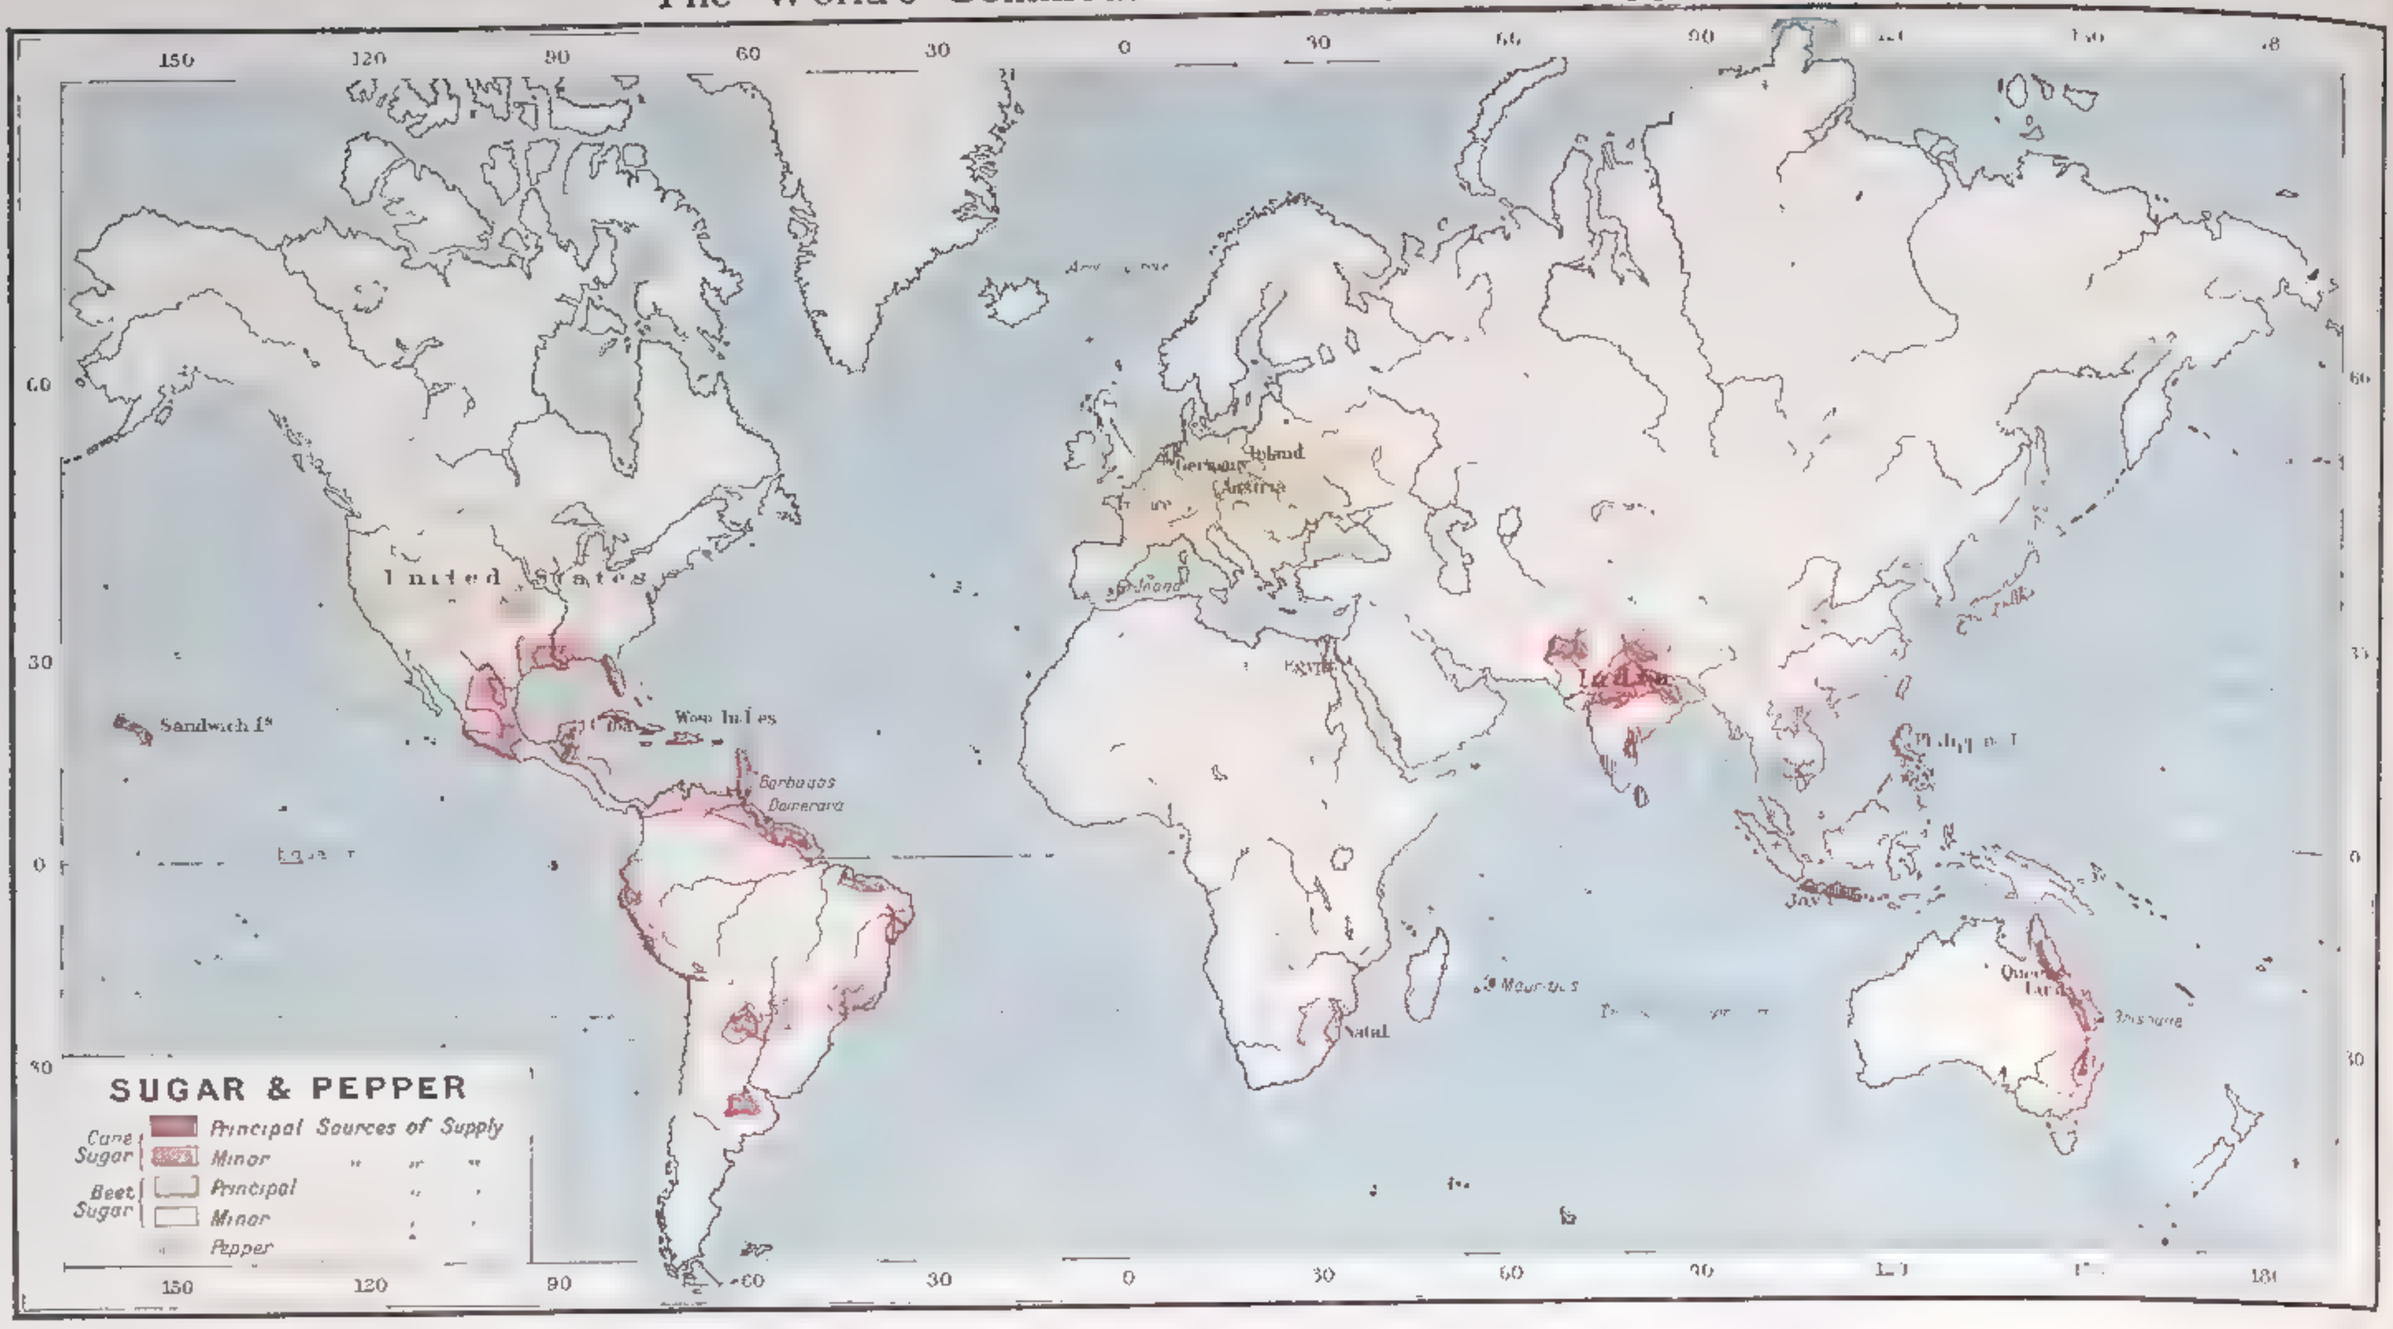
The COFFEE plant (Rubiaceae) is indigenous to Africa and probably to tropical Asia. The chief varieties are Coffea arabica, Coffea racemosa, Coffea liberica, and Coffea laurina. It only grows in the Tropics, where it thrives up to the frost time, the mountain product being decidedly superior. Brazil furnishes nearly three-fourths of the world's supply (average crop 1,584,000,000 lbs.), produced chiefly in Espiritu Santo, Minas Geraes, Rio de Janeiro, and Saõ Paulo. Guatemala raises nearly 70,000,000 lb., and Venezuela about the same quantity; San Salvador, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Ecuador, Colombia and Peru, all export coffee. West Indies.—Hayti exports from 60 to 80 million lbs. annually, and the Dominican Republic from 3 to 4 million lbs. Jamaica (31,670 acres), Martinique, Guadeloupe, Barbados, Trinidad and Guiana all grow coffee. The production of Cuba and Porto Rico has declined. S. Mexico annually exports 40 to 50 million lbs. Arabian Coffee, called "Mocha," is chiefly exported to Turkey and Egypt. In India, Madras (50,000 acres), Coorg (59,500 acres), and Burma and Ceylon (20,000 acres), are the chief coffee districts. The Dutch E. Indies produce large quantities of "Java" coffee Africa.—Réunion Coffee is considered inferior only to Mocha. St. Thomé annually exports several million lbs., and coffee is grown in Madagascar, Guinea, Rhodesia, E. Africa and Angola. In Australasia the industry has been started in N. Queensland, Fiji, Samoa, New Guinea, New Caledonia and Hawaii.





The World's Commodities.—5. Sugar and Pepper.



SUGAR.—A sugar map of the world, showing the regions available for sugar cultivation, would now include practically the entire civilized world, whereas fifty or sixty years ago the zone of cultivation did not extend much beyond the Tropics. At present, beet sugar is produced by all the countries on the Continent of Europe.

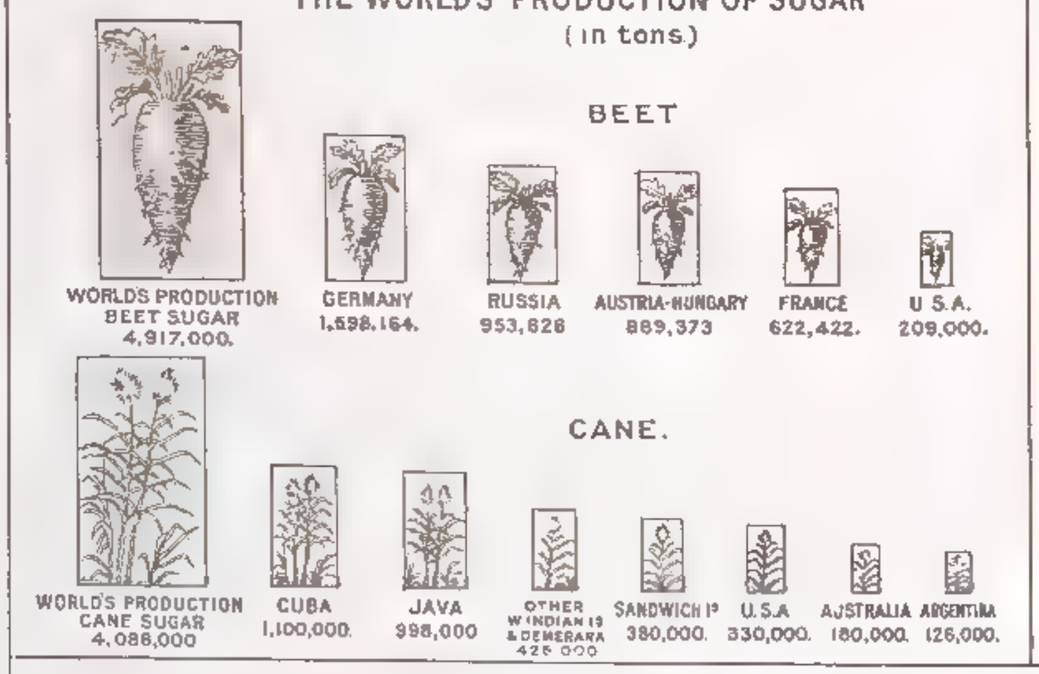
In the last 60 years the consumption of sugar has increased from 1,500,000 to about 9,000,000 tons, and within this period the beet sugar industry has developed from a production of some 200,000 to 5,000,000 tons. Statistics of the sugar industry necessarily include only marketed quantities, since in tropical countries, and notably India, enormous quantities of indigenous sugar are consumed by the inhabitants. The struggle between beet and cane has been fierce, but, contrary to the general impression, the output of cane sugar has expanded rapidly of late, rising steadily from 2,500,000 tons in 1900 to 4,000,000 in 1905. The estimated output for 1906 was 4,300,000. While in 1840 beet sugar represented but 5 per cent. of the world's total output, in 1900 beet sugar comprised two-thirds of the total production; but in 1905 the proportion had fallen to 55 per cent.

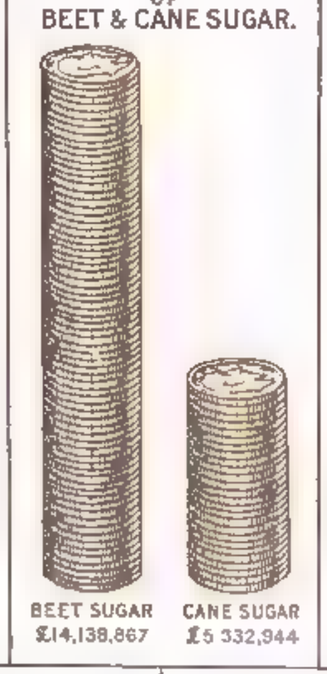
The United Kingdom is the only European country that does not cultivate sugar. Experiments have shown that the sugar beet grows well in England, but, until quite recently, the bounties granted by European Governments frequently resulted in sugar being sold in the United Kingdom at prices below the cost of production.

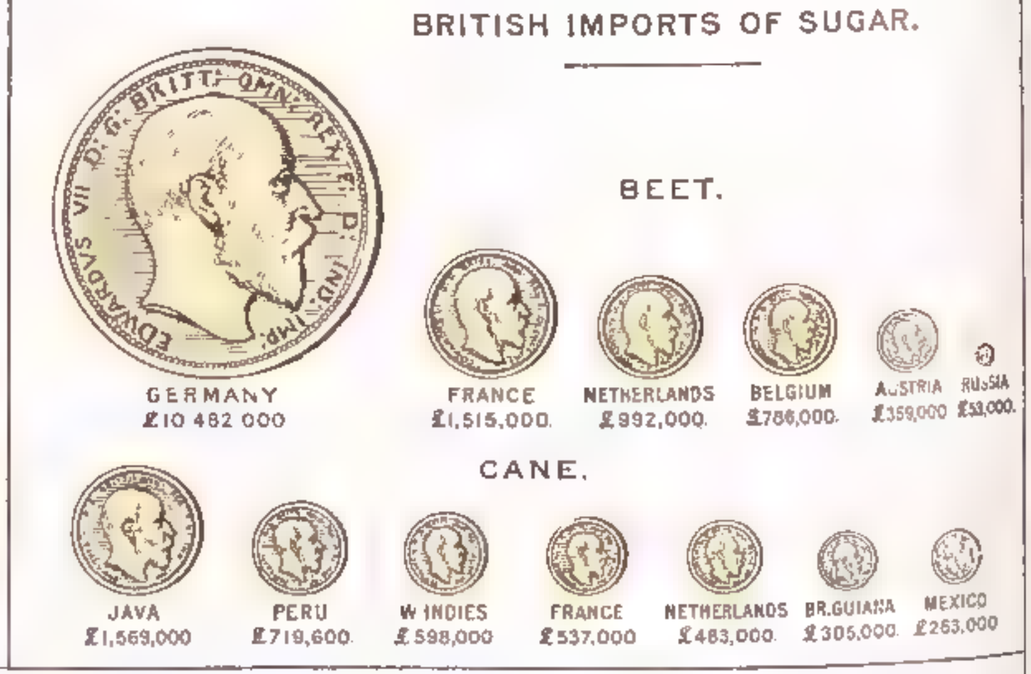
Cane Sugar is obtained from a grass which grows in warm, swampy districts. Originally a native of India, the sugar cane is especially associated with the West Indian Islands, South America and Java. India is estimated to produce 3,000,000 tons of cane sugar which is consumed locally. Southern China produces large quantities that do not come into commerce. Japan's production is approximately, 100,000 tons. In the cultivation of the sugar cane, Native labour is essential, as work in the plantations is unsuited to white men. The juice of the cane is extracted by milling, and from it raw sugar is crystallized by boiling, filtering, and chemical processes. The remaining molasses are now used for cattle food. The stalks (bagasse) are practically valueless even for fuel, which is invariably scarce in sugar cane countries.

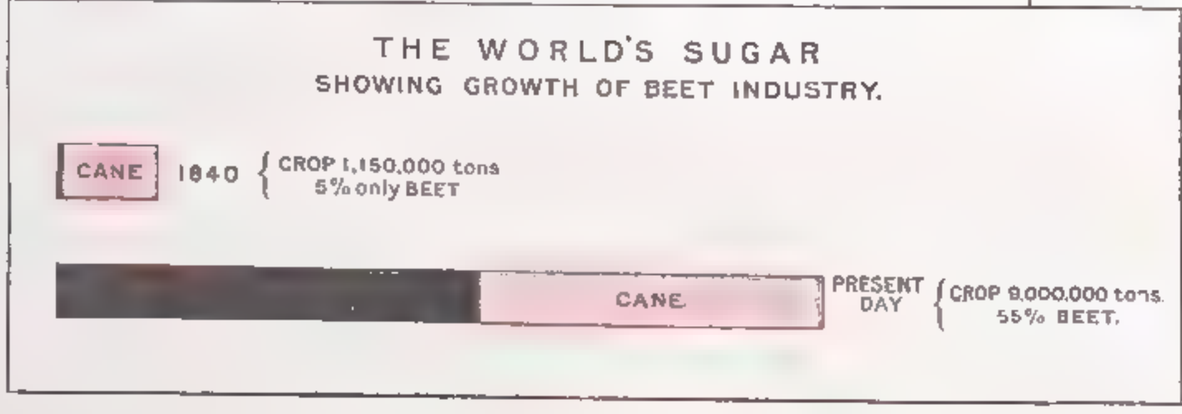
Beet Sugar.—The discovery of sugar in the beet was made by a German chemist, Margraff, in 1747. In 1812, a manufactory was in operation in Silesia, but, with the downfall of Napoleon and the opening of European ports to Colonial products, the production of sugar in Germany was abandoned, though in France the industry continued to exist, owing to high duties on Colonial products. By 1825 there were one hundred sugar factories in France, but the average yield of sugar was but 4 to 5½ per cent., compared with 12, and even higher results now achieved. Aided by a system of Government bounties, the cultivation of beet on the Continent has resulted in the establishment of an enormous industry, the production in Europe in 1902 being 6,825,000 tons, and it was thought this figure might be exceeded in 1906. The German Empire now leads in the production of beet sugar, followed by Russia, Austria, Hungary and France in the order named. Beet sugar production necessitates more care in cultivation and more expensive machinery than cane, but it holds the advantage that, unlike cane sugar, it can be produced in populous districts where a market exists and where the residue can be consumed by cattle.

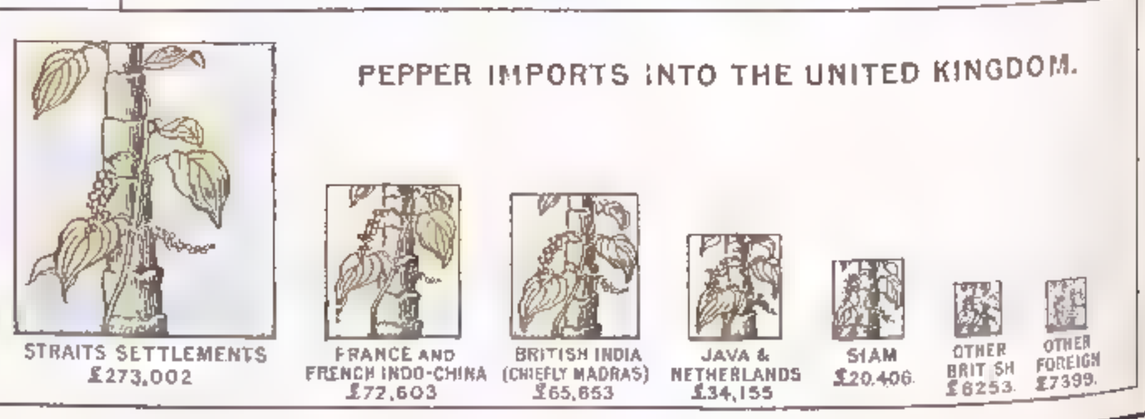
PEPPER (piper nigrum), a climbing plant, provides the white and black pepper and peppercorns of commerce. Indigenous to South India and South-east Asia, it is chiefly cultivated in the Straits Settlements, Sumatra and Siam, and the Malabar coast. Singapore is the great pepper port.



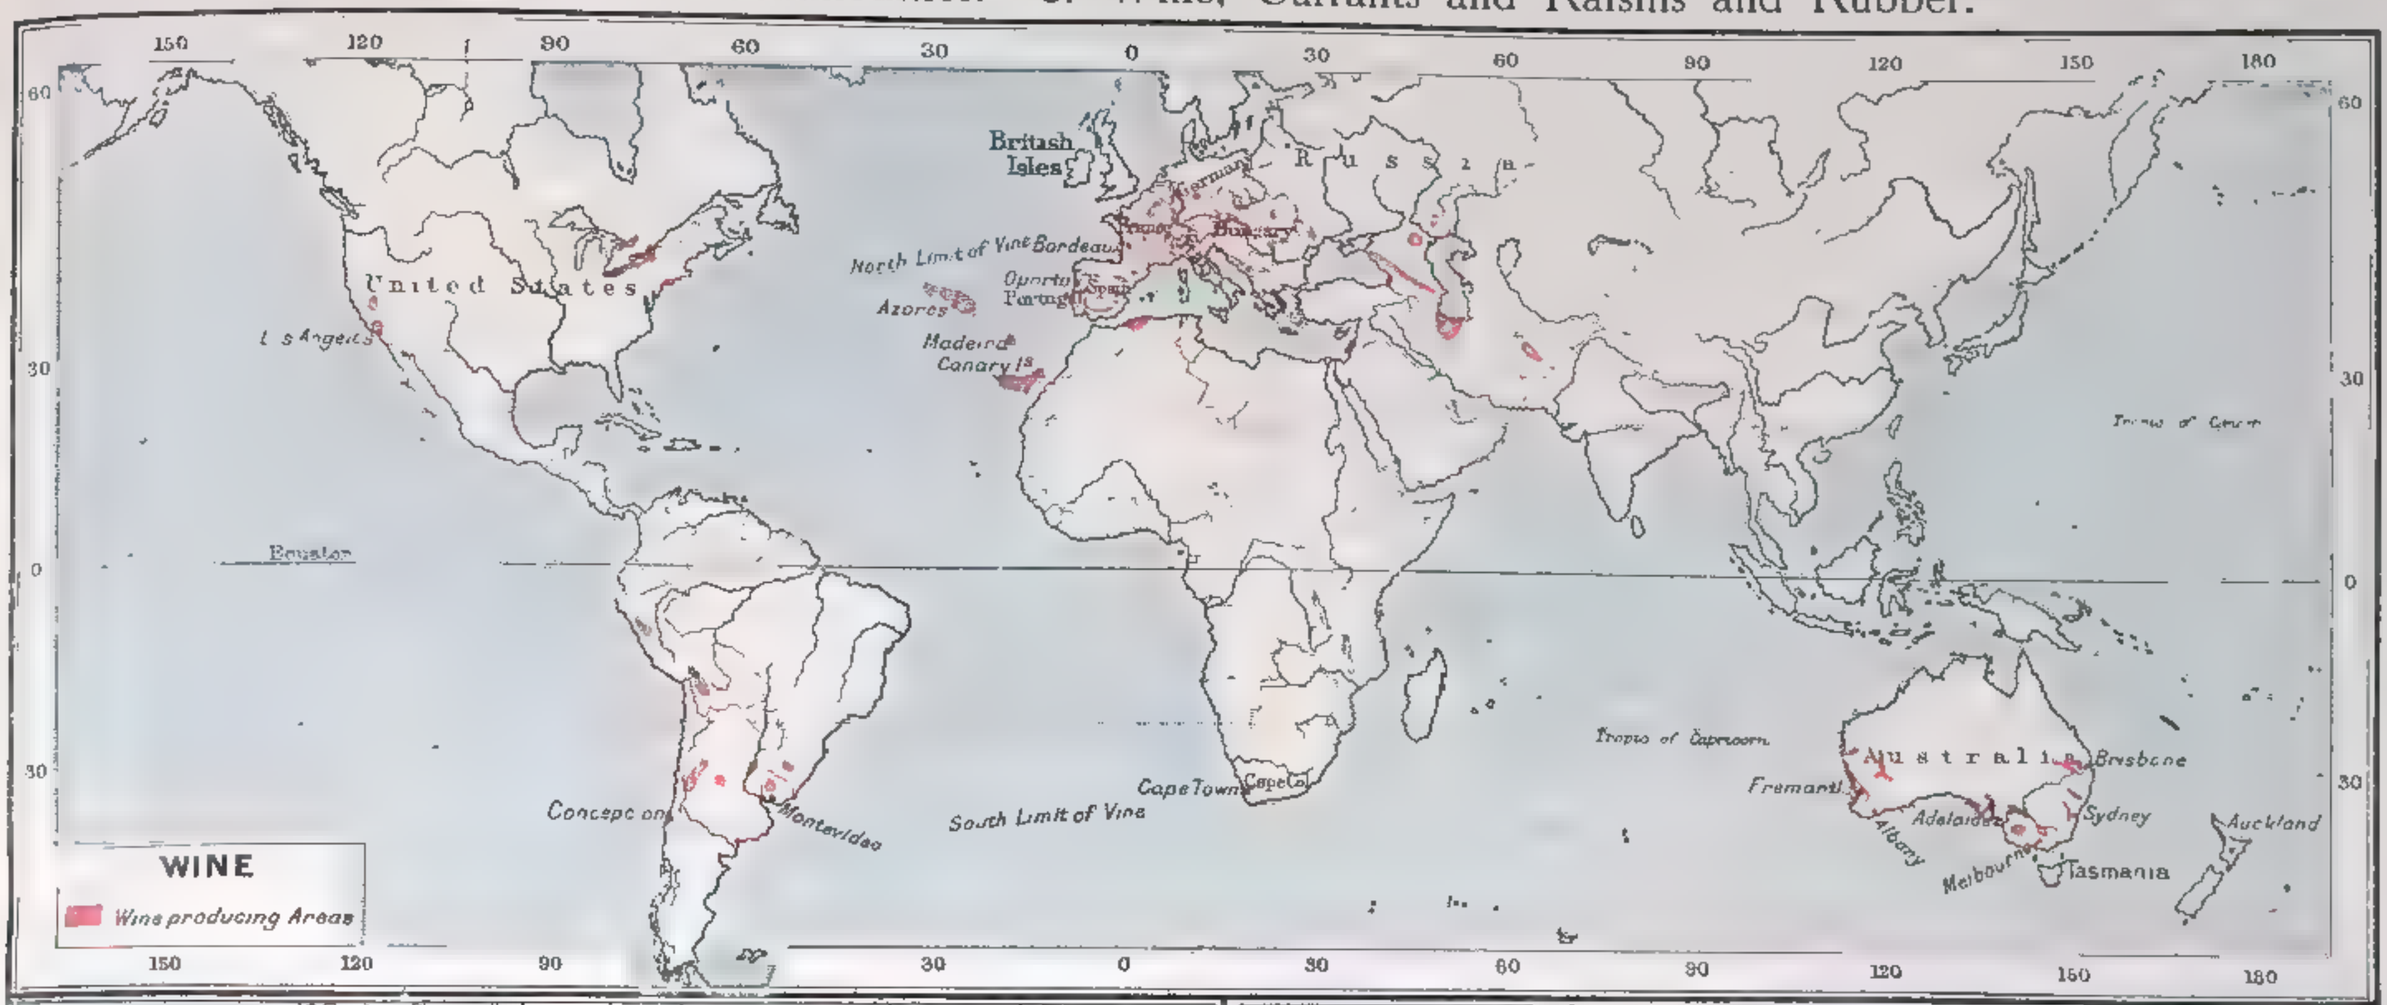


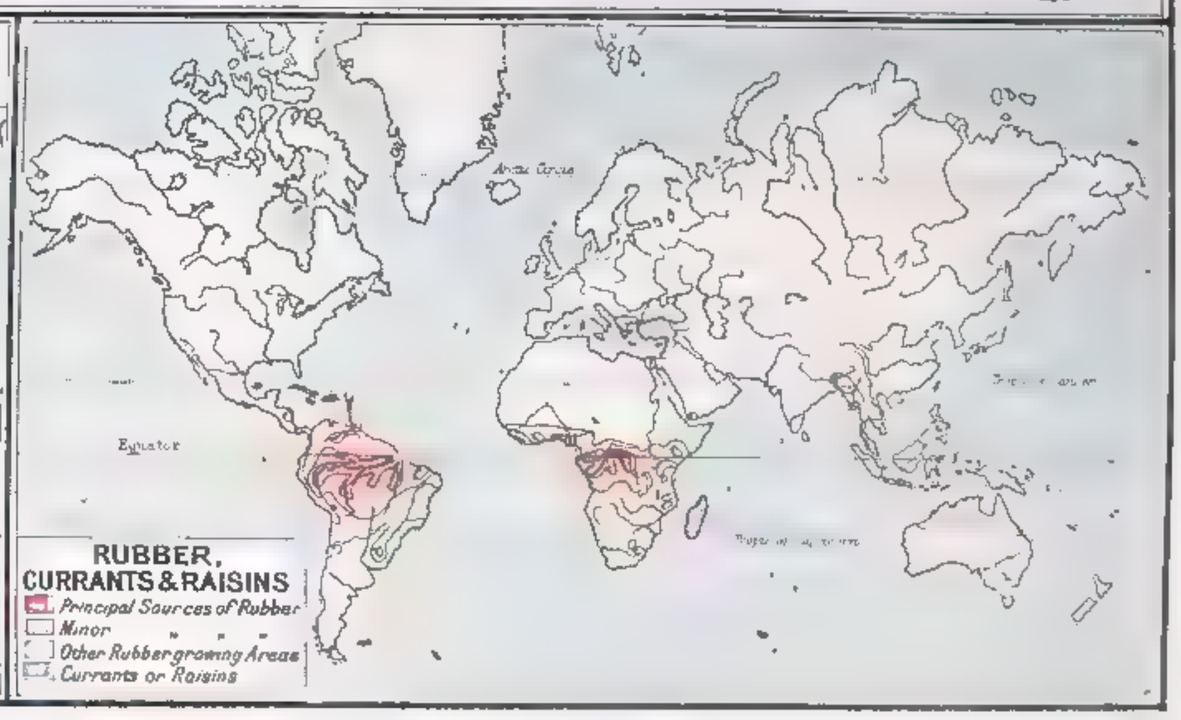






The World's Commodities.—6. Wine, Currants and Raisins and Rubber.



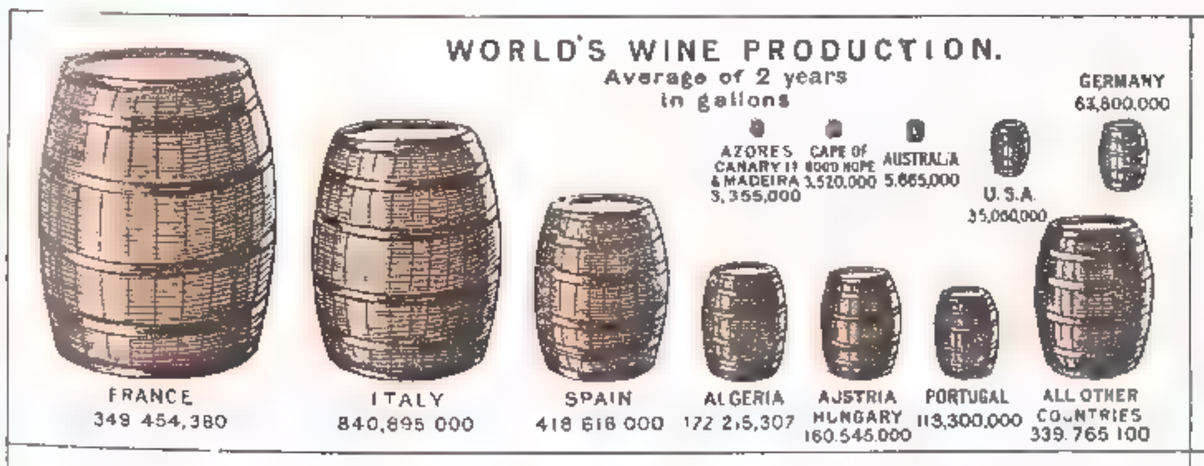


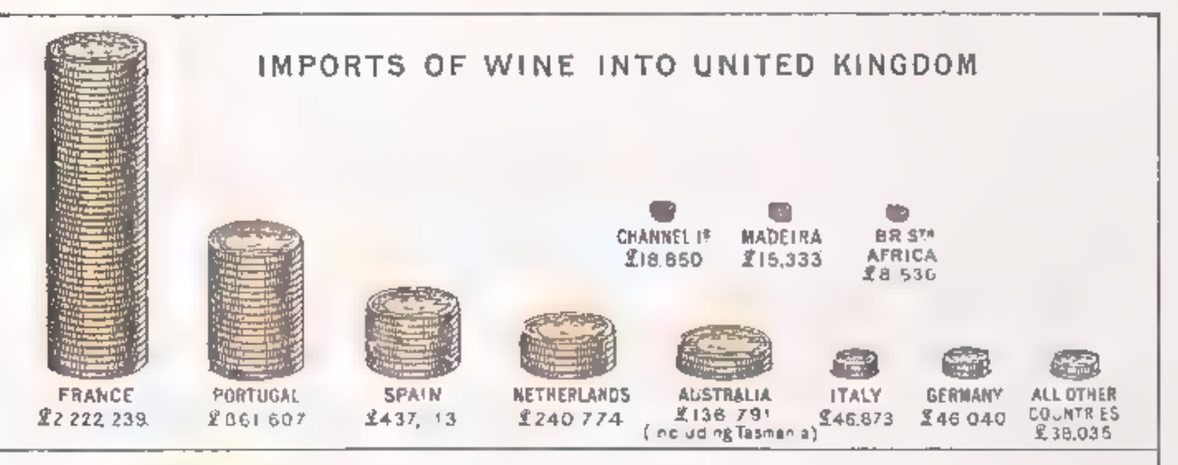
WINE is one of the oldest of industries, and the above map shows its present wide distribution. Of the total world-production of 3,000,000,000 gallons, France and Algeria produce about one-half; Italy and Spain are the other chief sources of supply. The chief French wine districts are (1) Bordeaux, producing claret and Sauterne. Its clarets may be divided into 3 classes :—Haute Médoc—Châteaux Margaux, Lafite, Latour, etc.; Graves—Château Haut Brion, Pape Clément, etc.; and St. Emilion and Fronsac—Cheval Blanc and Château Ausone. (2) Burgundy, the district of the Côte d'Or, producing Burgundies and Chablis in Dijon, Macon, Chablis, and Beaune. (3) Champagne produces sparkling wines, chiefly at Reims, Sillery, and Epernay. (4) Saumur also produces a sparkling wine. (5) Cognac grows the best brandy. Italy is famous for Chianti grown in Tuscany. Wine also comes from the Apennines, Capri, Western Sicily (Marsala), Alessandria (Asti), and Parma (Felino). Spain produces Port in the Douro valley. Tarragona Port comes from E. Spain, Sherry from Jerez in Andalusia, and wines from Alicante and Valentia are exported to France for blending. In Austria Hungary, Tokay is grown on the Carpathians, and Maraschino in Dalmatia. In Germany, the slopes of the Vosges and the warm valleys of the Rhine, Moselle, and Neckar, give us the light Rhenish wines. Hock (Hochheimer) is grown on the Rheingau, Nierstein in Hesse, and red wines in Baden and the Mitzer district. Russia produces wine in Bessarabia, Crimea and Trans-Caucasia. Some wine is also grown in Switzerland, the Balkans, Cyprus, Chios, Corsica and Ionian Isles; also in the Azores, Canaries and Madeira. In Africa, the Algerian wine industry on the Tell is important, and Tunis grows wine. In Cape Colony the vine grows magnificently. Australia produces good Clarets and Burgundies.

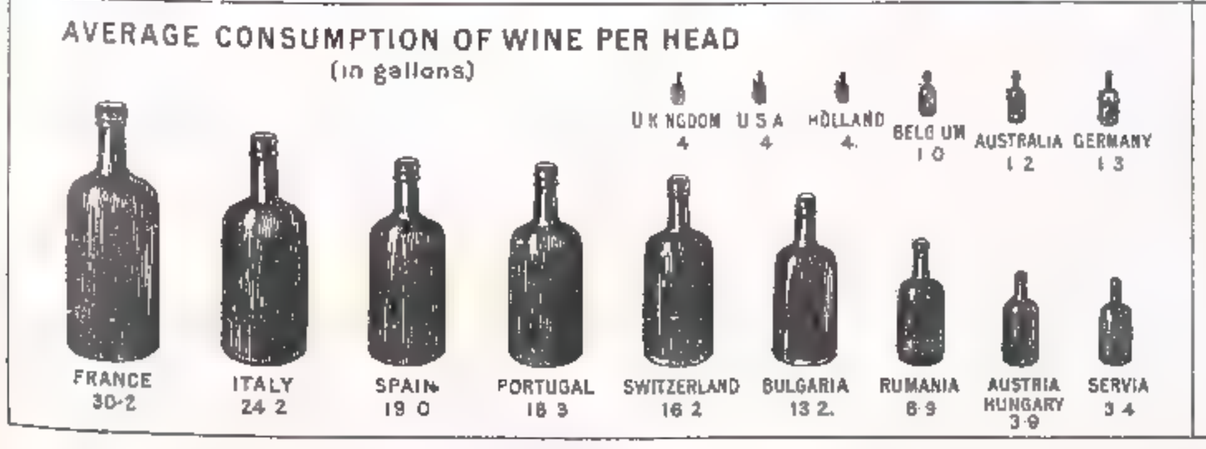
In the United States, wine is produced in California, New York State, and south of Lake Erie. In S. America, Chile is important. At Concepcion, "Chica" is made. Argentina, Uruguay, Peru and Bolivia also produce some wine in the order named.

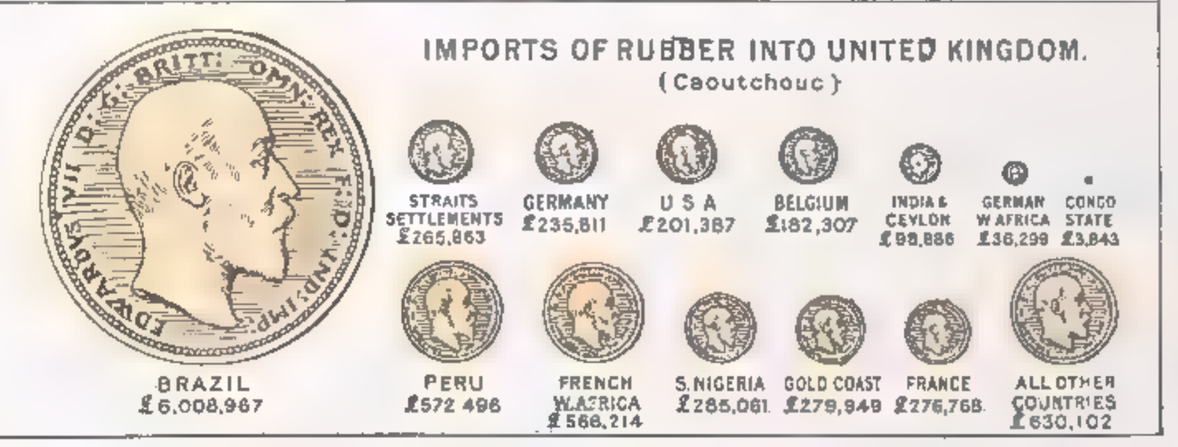
INDIA-RUBBER (or caoutchouc), is an extract from the juice of a variety of tropical trees. The Hevea and Micranda trees, the chief sources of supply, furnish Pará rubber, and are found in S. America, principally in Brazil, Bolivia, Peru. Ceará rubber is the product of the tree Manihot Glaziovii. In India, rubber is derived from a species of fig tree; in Mexico, from the guayule plant; and in Africa from various twining plants. The first development of the rubber industry was due to the invention, in 1823, of the mackintosh waterproof coat, and it was further extended in 1843, by the discovery of a method of vulcanizing the caoutchouc with sulphur. The world's annual production is estimated at 57,000 tons, of which more than half is obtained from S. America and Africa. French West Africa produces some 10,000 tons, and the Congo State about 6,000 tons. In Burma, Ceylon, Formosa, Brit. Guiana, and Samoa, rubber cultivation is on the increase, while in Trinidad, Tobago, Jamaica, Grenada, St. Vincent, St. Lucia and Dominica, the Central American rubber plant (Castilloa elastica), has been introduced, and does well.

The United States is the largest rubber consumer, Germany being second, the United Kingdom third, then France, Austria-Hungary, Holland, Belgium, and Italy, in the order named.









The World's Commodities.—7. Tobacco.

The TOBACCO of Commerce is derived from the dried and manufactured leaves of numerous varieties of Nicotiana, a genus of plants belonging to the natural order of Solanaceae. The tobacco plant is an annual, growing from three to six feet in height, and is indigenous to tropical America, though a few species are also native to Eastern Asia. It is now cultivated all over the world in sub-tropical and temperate regions: thriving best in a warm climate, but ripening, under favourable conditions, up to 60° of latitude. Its use was general in tropical America before the discovery of that continent by Columbus, and the name is probably derived from the tabaco or tube through which the West Indian natives smoked the plant. Its Latin name of Nicotiana it owes to Nicot, the French Ambassador to Portugal, by whom it was planted in 1560 in France. Sir John Hawkins first introduced it to England in 1565, and its use was further extended by Raleigh and Drake. From that time, and in spite of numerous edicts and laws prohibiting smoking, tobacco has gradually spread over Europe and the rest of the world, and now forms one of the most widely distributed of commercial products.

The chief varieties of Tobacco known to commerce are:—

North American.—The United States is the chief tobacco growing country of the world—over 1,000,000 acres being under cultivation, with an annual yield of 816,000,000 lbs., valued at over 11 million sterling. The chief tobacco growing states are Kentucky, North Carolina, and Virginia, and the plant is also extensively grown in Wisconsin, Ohio, Tennessee, South Carolina, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Maryland, and New York. Louisville, in Kentucky, is the largest tobacco mart in the world, and the principal American tobacco-ports are Baltimore, New York, New Orleans, and Philadelphia. Total Exports to all countries, £6,455,000; to the United Kingdom £2,887,000. Mexican tobacco is of good quality, and is exported to the annual value of nearly £200,000. In Ontario, Canada, 8½ million pounds are produced annually.

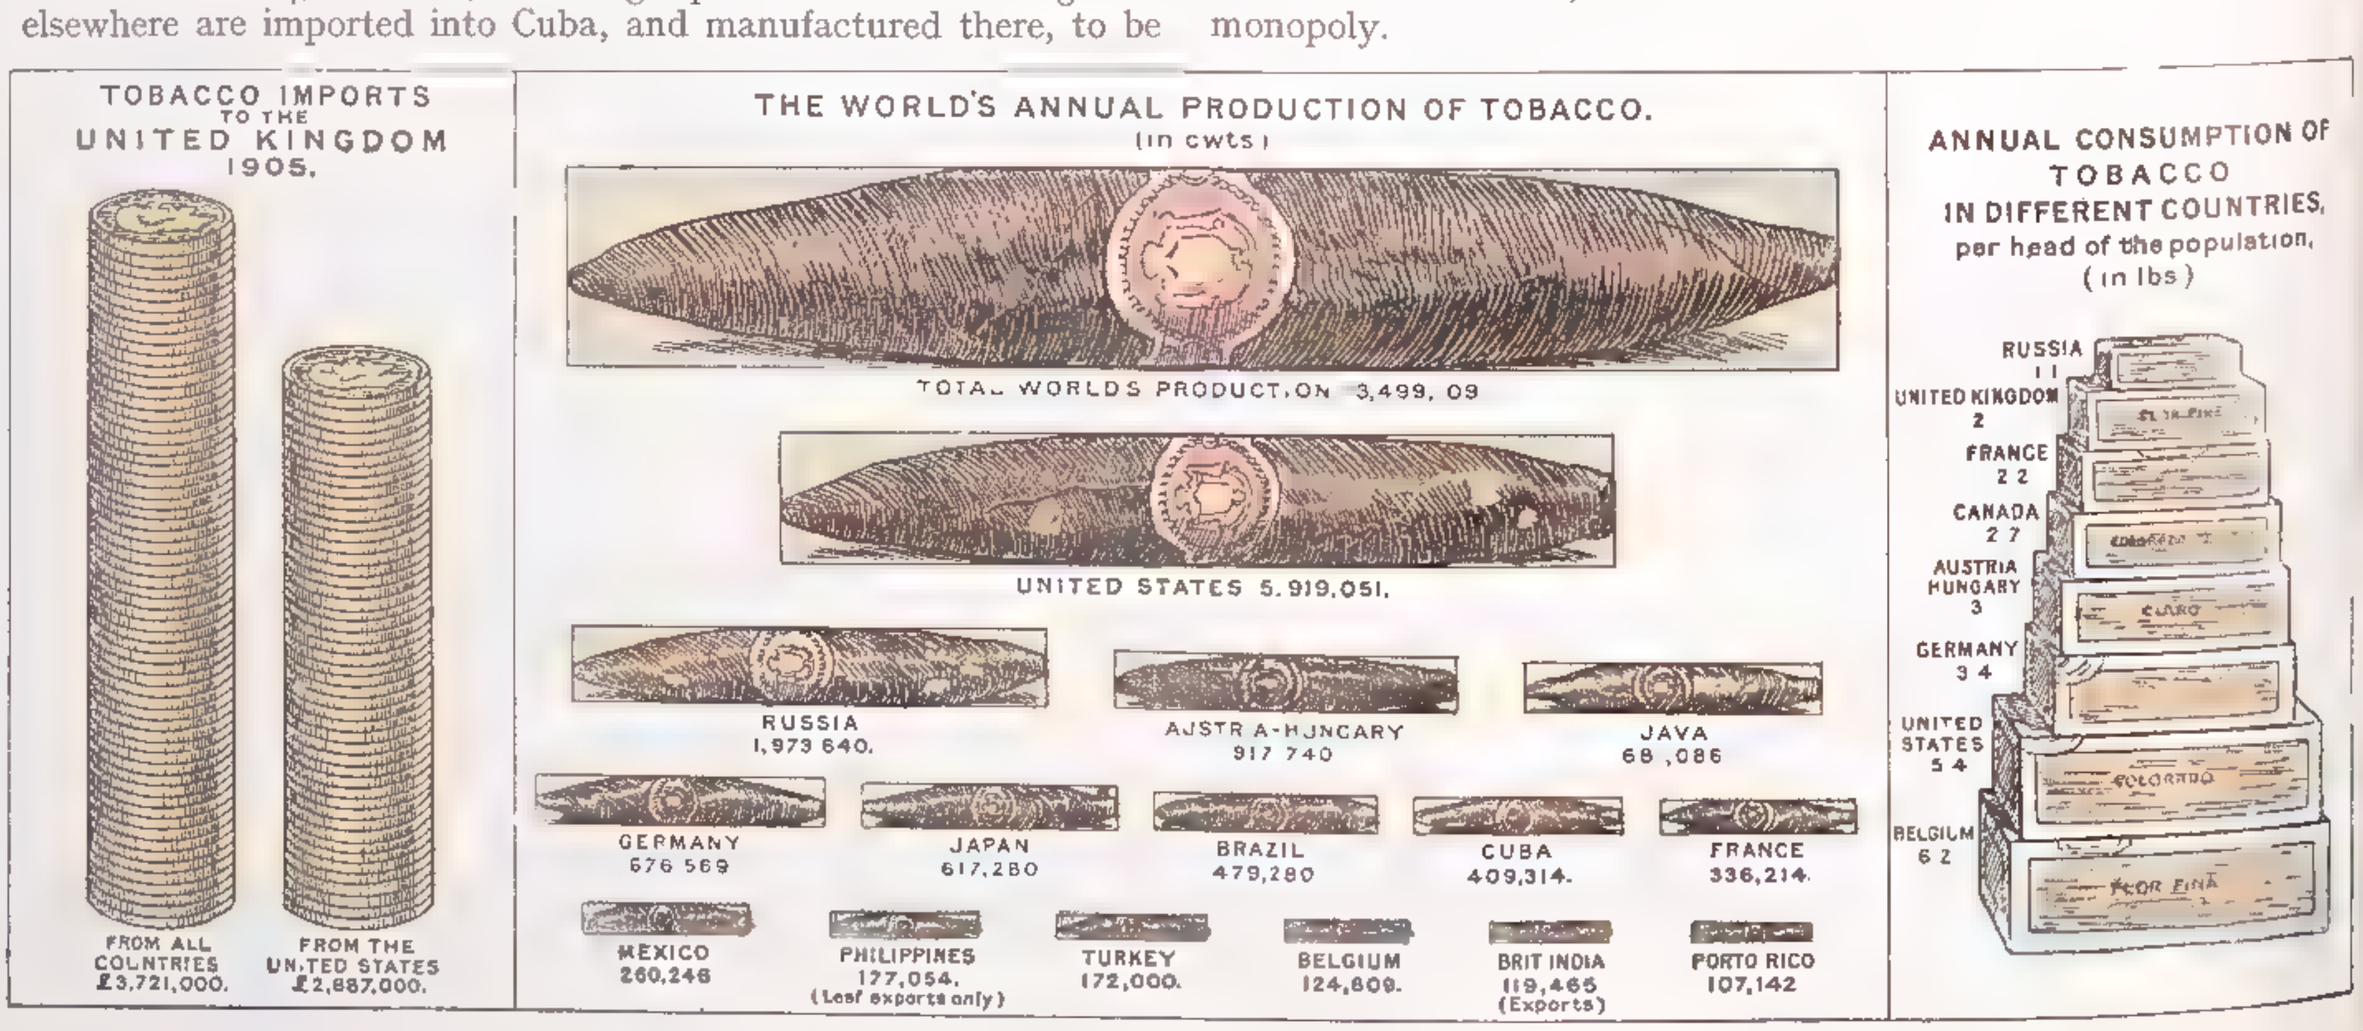
West Indian.—The finest cigar tobacco comes from Cuba: the best varieties being grown in the district of Vuelta Abajo, west of Havana, the great tobacco-port of Cuba. The area under cultivation is 84,100 acres, and large quantities of "leaf" grown elsewhere are imported into Cuba, and manufactured there, to be re-exported as "genuine Havanas." Porto Rico has over 14,000 acres under cultivation, and produces an excellent pipe tobacco. Value of Exports (almost entirely to the United States) about £520,000. The other well-known West Indian tobacco is Dominican, the best varieties of which are grown near Porto Plata, in the Republic of San Domingo. In Hawaii a very promising start has been made with the Cuban variety.

South American.—Brazil is the principal tobacco growing country of South America. Bahia is the chief port and centre of the industry, but considerable quantities are also grown in the province of Rio Grande do Sul. Annual Exports, over a million sterling. Venezuelan tobacco is grown in the provinces of Varinas, Merida, and Margarita, and in the Orinoco Delta; Ciudad Bolivar being the chief tobacco centre. Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Paraguay also export tobacco in small quantities.

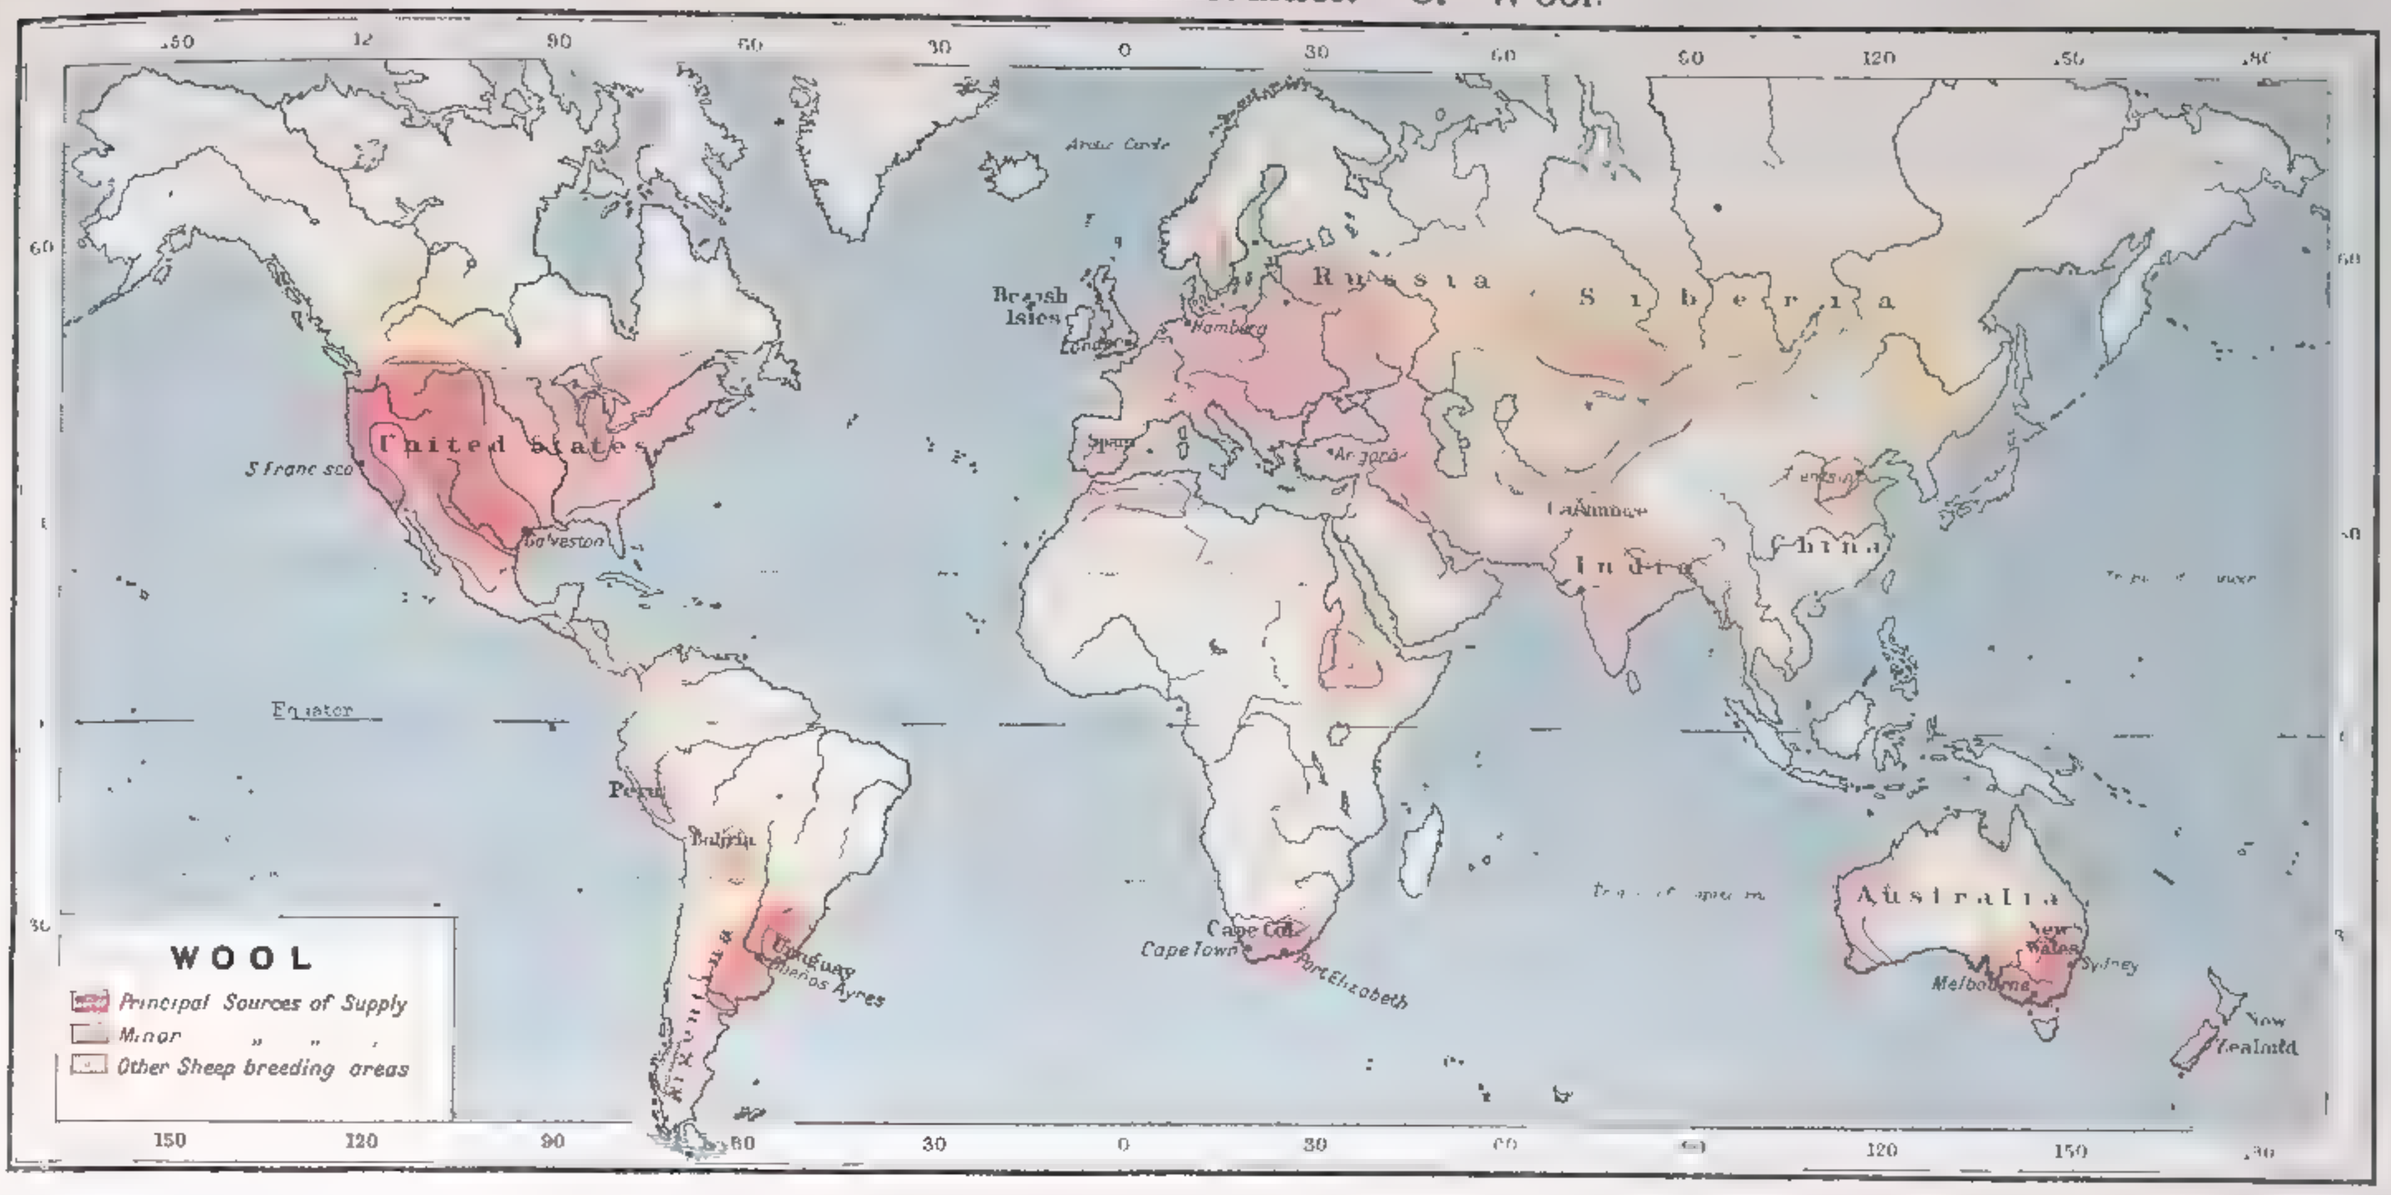
Asiatic.—In Asia the chief varieties are—Manila, from the Philippine Islands: the best varieties of which are grown in Northern Luzon [annual exports about £456,000]; East Indian, chiefly from India (1,000,000 acres under cultivation but, except in Madras, the crop is of poor quality, annual exports £139,000), Java and Sumatra [annual exports, almost entirely to Holland, £2,500,000]; Persian and Levant (chiefly from the Shiraz district), Latakia being the best known variety. Tobacco is also extensively cultivated in Southern Japan, over the greater part of China Proper, and in some districts in Central Asia.

African.—Rhodesian and Transvaal tobaccos are shortly expected to assume commercial importance.

European.—The principal tobacco producing countries of Europe are—Russia, especially in the governments of Chernigov, Samara, and Poltava; Austria-Hungary, in Hungary, the Tyrol, and Eastern Galicia; Turkey, in Macedonia; Germany, in the Palatinate and Brandenburg; France, in the basin of the Garonne; and the Low Countries. In Ireland 80 acres (30 in Meath) are under tobacco, and the crop has proved a commercial success. In Turkey, France, Austria, Spain, Portugal, and Italy the cultivation of tobacco is under State control, and its manufacture forms a Government monopoly.

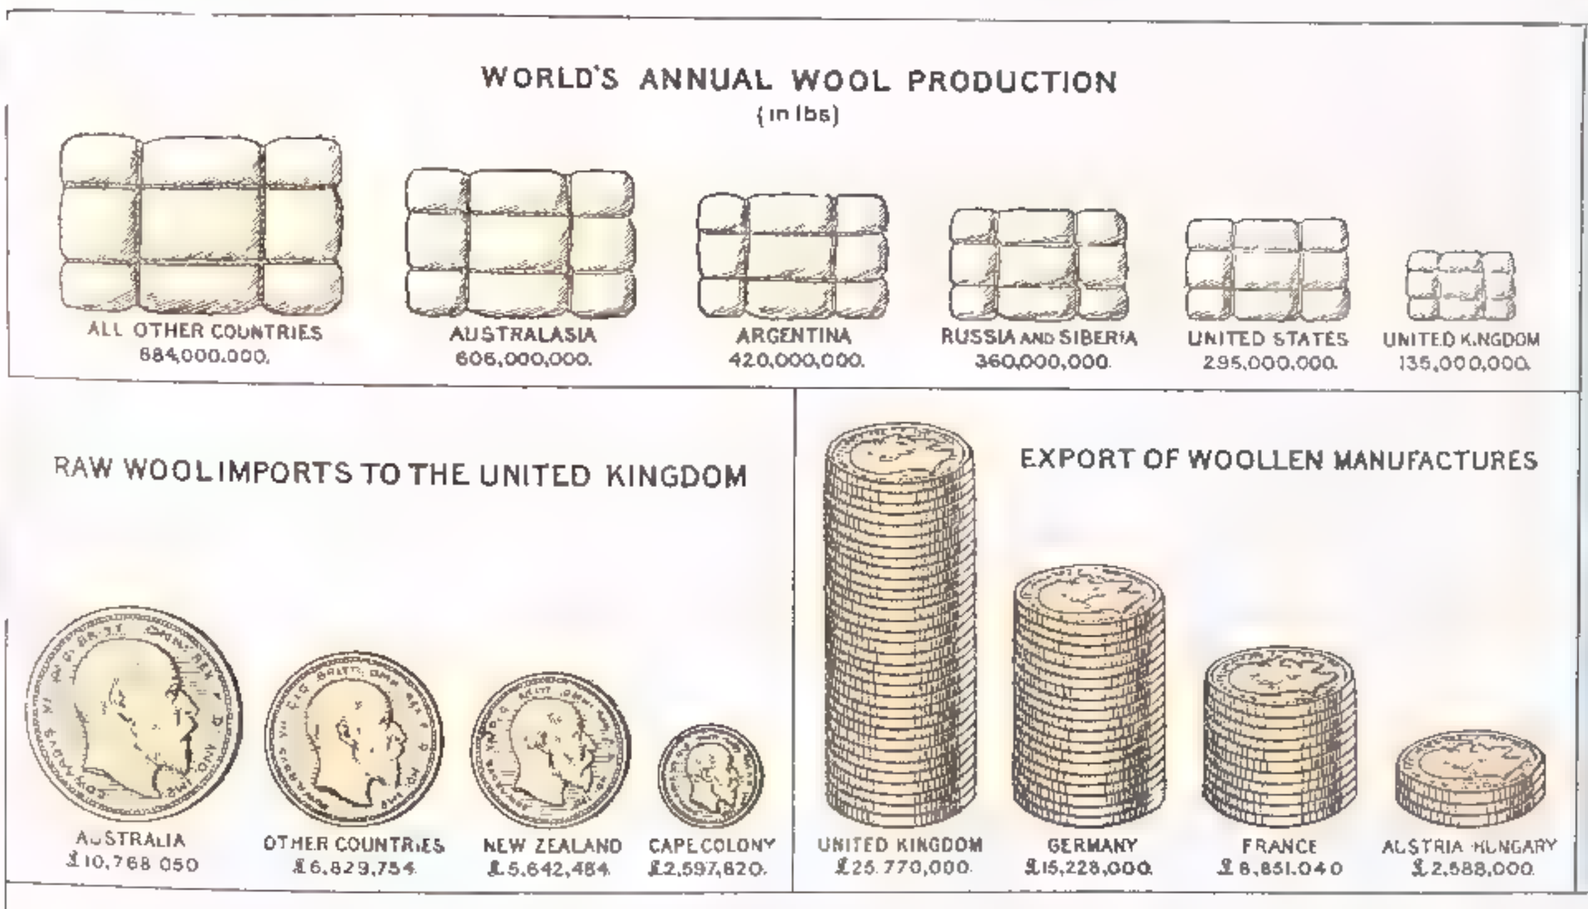


The World's Commodities.—8. Wool.

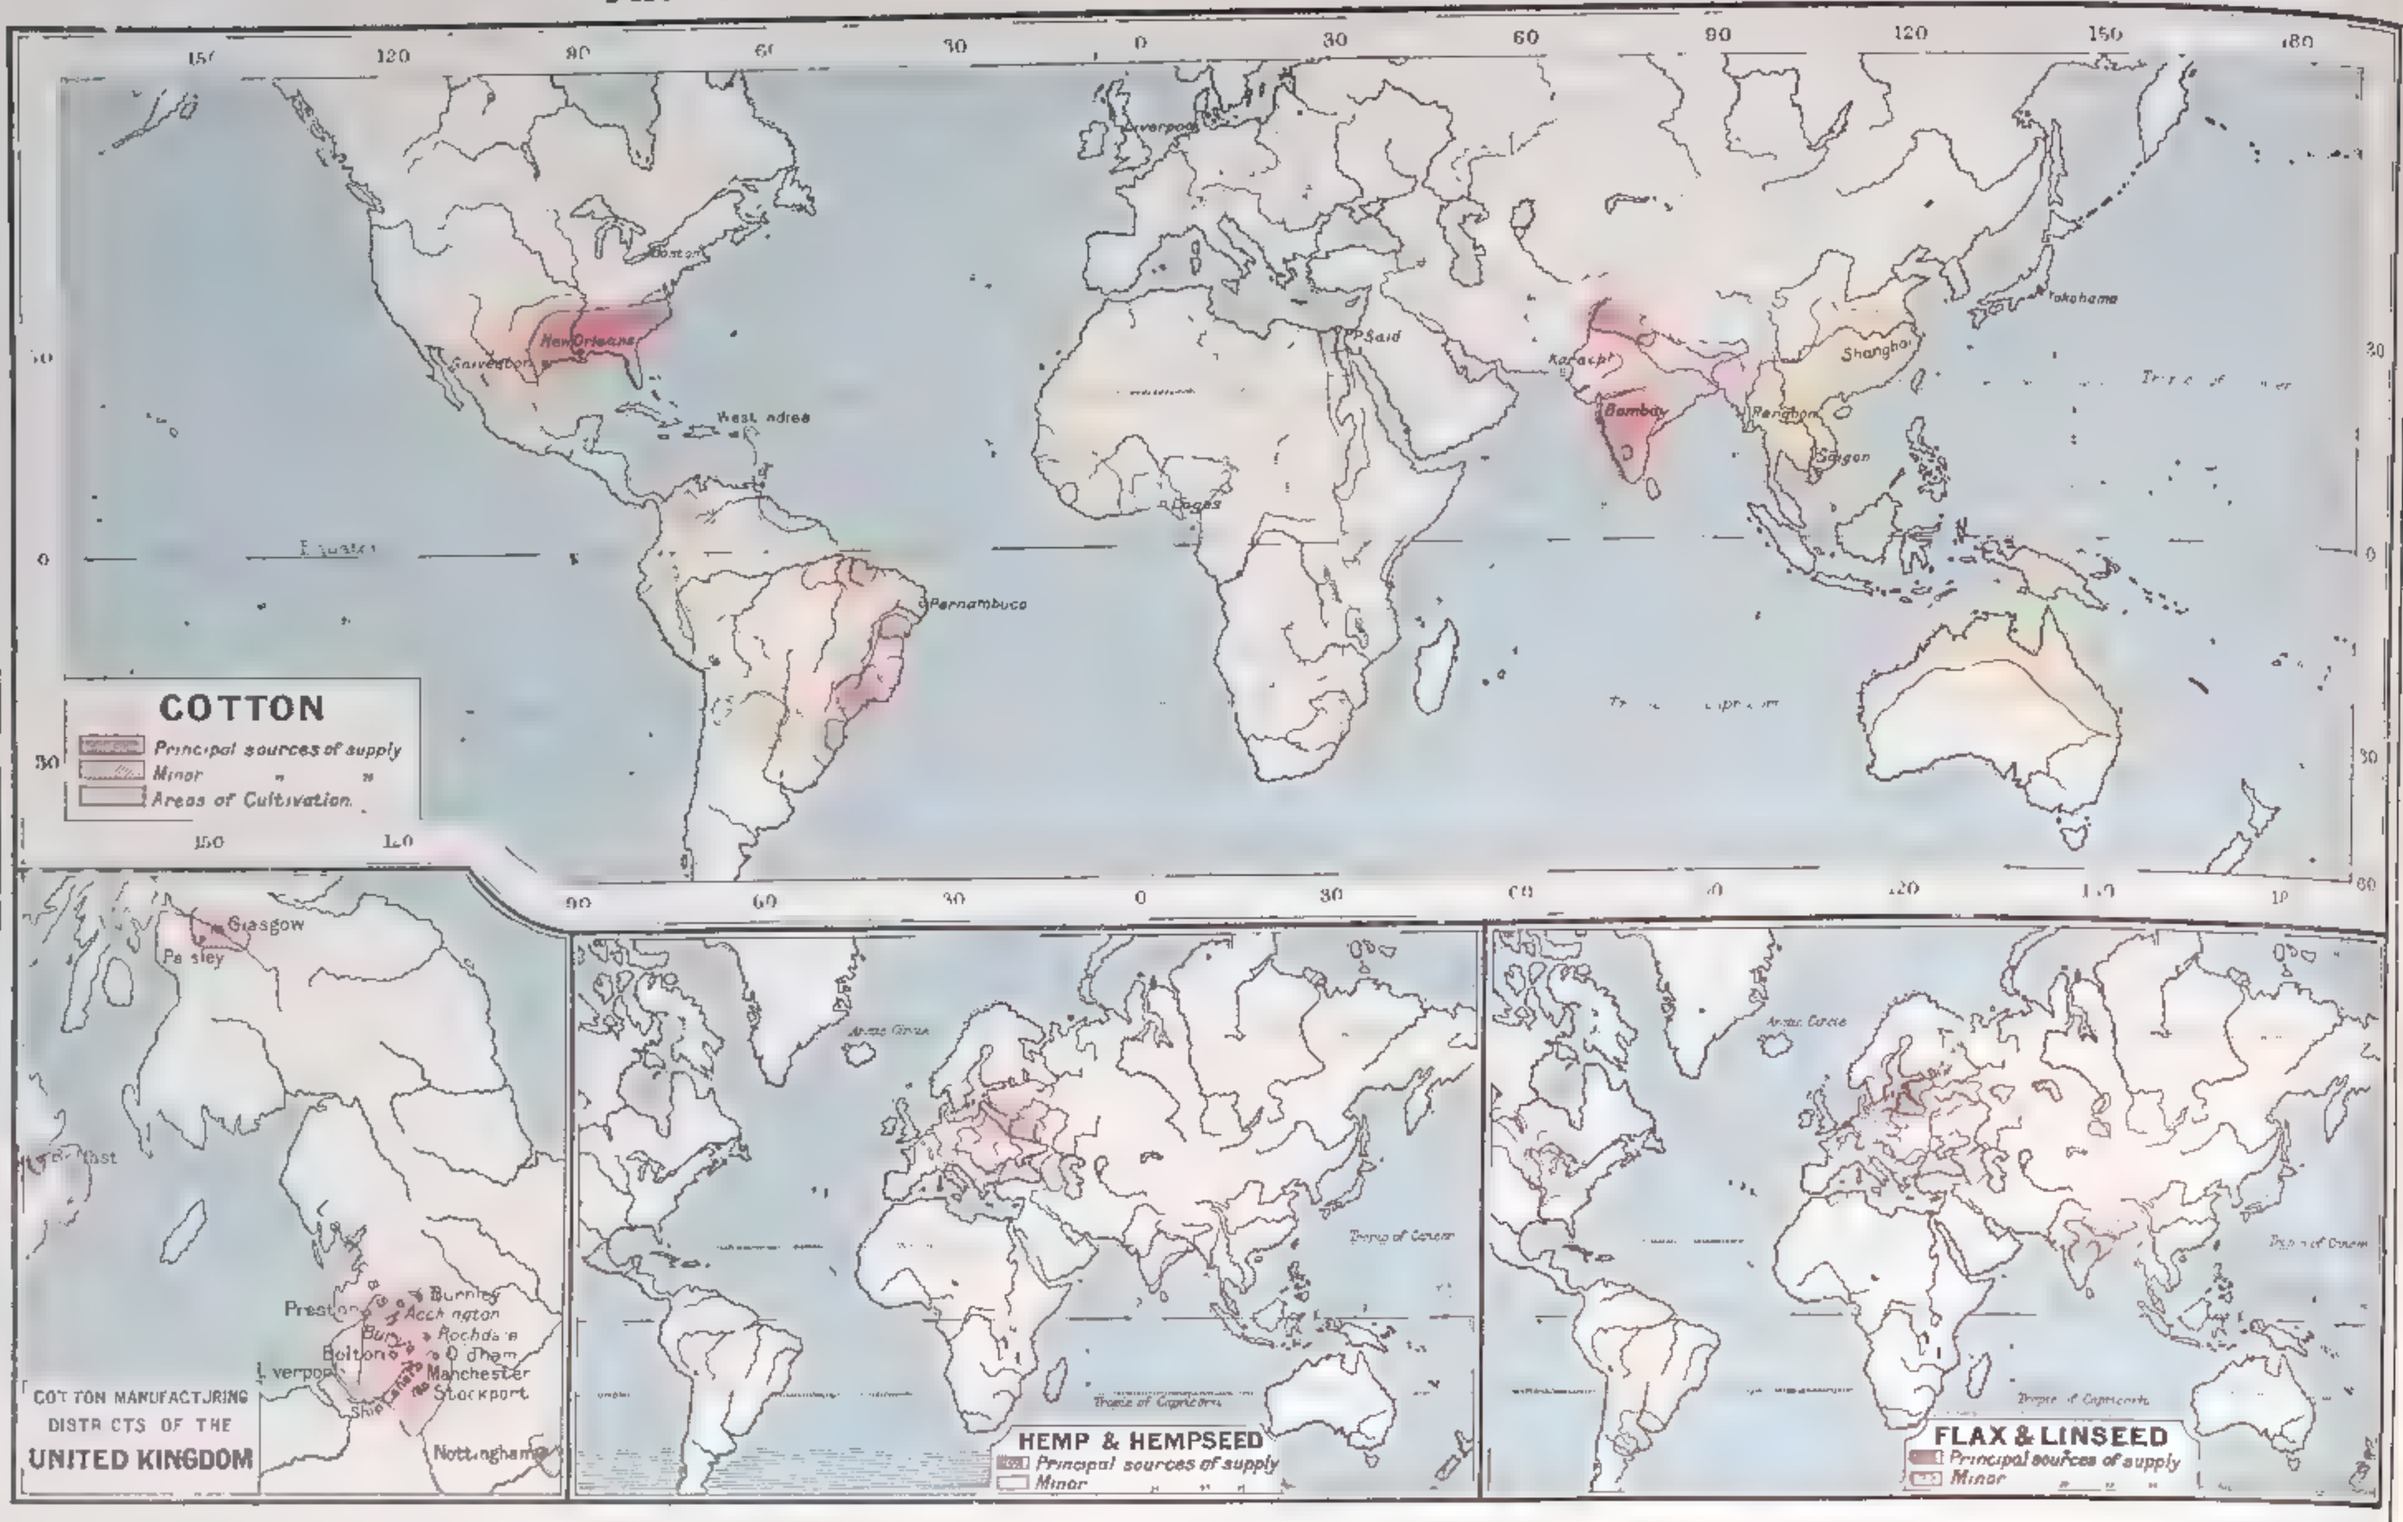


WOOL.—Sheep have been a source of wealth to mankind for a longer period than history records. Before agriculture was practised nomadic peoples maintained themselves by the rearing of flocks. Sheep, as their present wide distribution testifies, will thrive under many different climatic and other conditions : apparently bearing great heat or great cold equally well. Nearly half the world's output of wool is produced in the thinly populated countries of the Southern Hemisphere. Sources of supply. Australia is the finest wool-producing country in the world—a distinction that formerly belonged to Spain. The flocks of the Commonwealth are very largely composed of Merino sheep, of Spanish origin. Since their first introduction into New South Wales, their wool, especially in the Mudgee district, has become softer and more elastic, and though less dense than formerly, the fleece has increased considerably both in weight and length. New Zealand.—Cross-bred sheep predominate, largely owing to the frozen mutton trade, which the colony has developed with great success. South Africa is a principal source of supply both for wool and mohair, and from Turkey in Asia about an equal quantity of mohair (Angora) is obtained as from South Africa. Argentina has a rapidly growing wool industry, though millions of acres suitable for sheep grazing are still unoccupied. Two-thirds of the flocks are raised in the province of Buenos Ayres. Here, however, as in the United States, the cross-breeding of sheep for the sake of mutton has resulted in the production of a coarser wool than that of Australia. In S. Russia and N. Caucasia, where large tracts were used for sheep grazing 25 years ago, the increasing price of land has caused the industry to decline, and given a stimulus to the rearing of sheep in Siberia. Merinos (of the Negretti type) form the most valuable part of the Siberian flocks, and are raised chiefly in the districts round Omsk and Petropavlovsk, although anywhere within 200 miles of the Siberian railway is regarded as suitable for sheep breeding. The hardier, coarse-woolled native breeds stand the cold of Siberia far better than do the Merinos. Some of this coarser wool is exported to the United States, but all the merino grown is absorbed by Russia. Northern China produces a considerable amount of wool, and there is an export trade to the United States through the port of Tientsin. Lama and Alpaca come from Peru and Bolivia, and Cashmere is produced in N.E. India. The British Isles.—From the XIII to XV Century, England was foremost as a wool-growing country, but, except in a few counties, sheep rearing in the British Isles is now an industry of minor importance.

The United States consume one-fifth of the world's production of raw wool, and form the largest manufacturing country of woollen goods, followed by the United Kingdom, Germany, France, and Russia. In exports of woollens, the United Kingdom is far ahead of all competitors. In point of value for manufacturing purposes Australian and Argentine wool rank first ; European and American second ; Chinese, Russian, Turkish, and Indian, third. These last wools are used for carpets. London is the leading wool market. Bremen and Hamburg now import direct, and American buyers purchase Australian wool from the growers. Australian wool is shipped from Sydney and Melbourne ; South African wool from Cape Town and Port Elizabeth ; and Argentine and Uruguayan from Buenos Ayres.



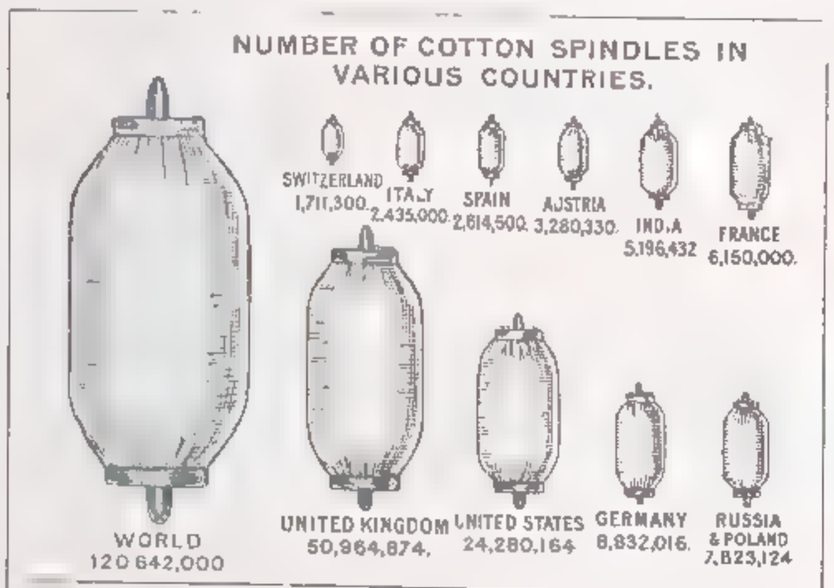
The World's Commodities.—9. Cotton, Flax and Hemp.

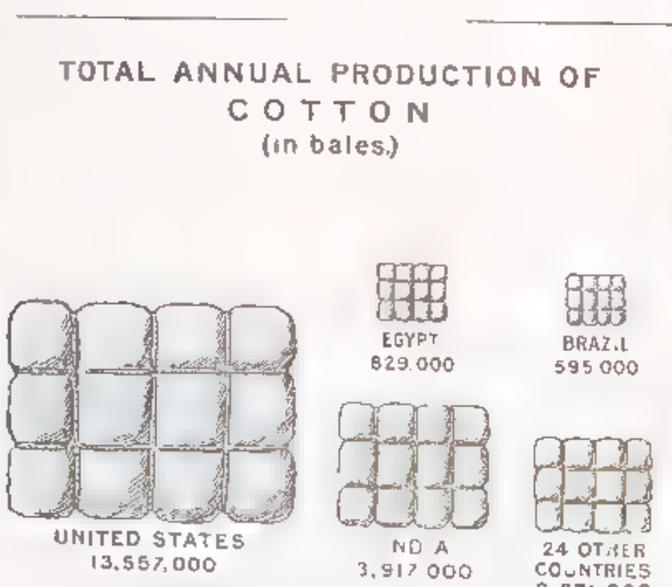


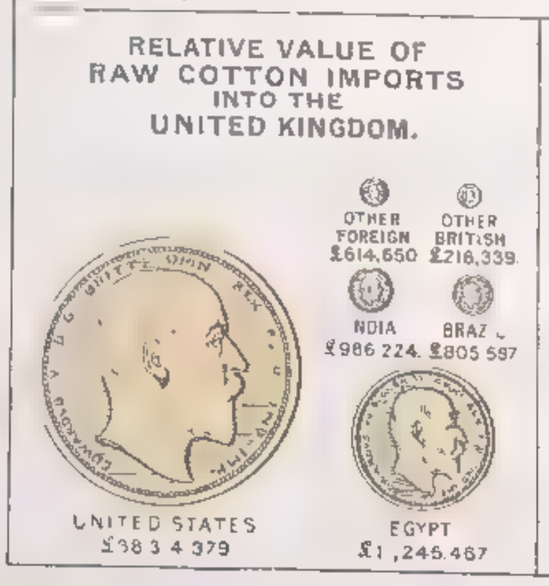
COTTON.—The cotton shrubs yielding the cotton of commerce belong to the genus Gossypium. There are several species—that furnishing the bulk of the world's cotton being G. herbaceum. Long-staple cotton has a fibre up to 2 inches in length; short-staple, from two-thirds of an inch to 1½ inches. The United States cotton belt, producing two-thirds of the world's supply, extends from N. Carolina to Mexico. The chief producing states, named in order of importance, are—Texas, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, S. Carolina, Arkansas, Louisiana, and N. Carolina. In these, and six contiguous States, from 28 to 32 million acres are annually planted with cotton, producing from 10,000,000 to 13,000,000 bales. Cotton is grown in all parts of India (total acreage nearly 20 million acres, producing nearly 4 million bales), but owing to the unscientific methods of cultivation, Indian cotton is of poor quality and short of fibre. Egypt produces a very fine and high priced cotton, and although the crop is only about ⅕ that of India and $\frac{1}{16}$ that of the United States, Egypt furnishes English spinners with their second largest supply. The Egyptian crop cannot be greatly increased, but there is a large area in the Sudan suitable for cotton cultivation. Brazil produces nearly 600,000 bales annually, or 3 per cent. of the world's supply.

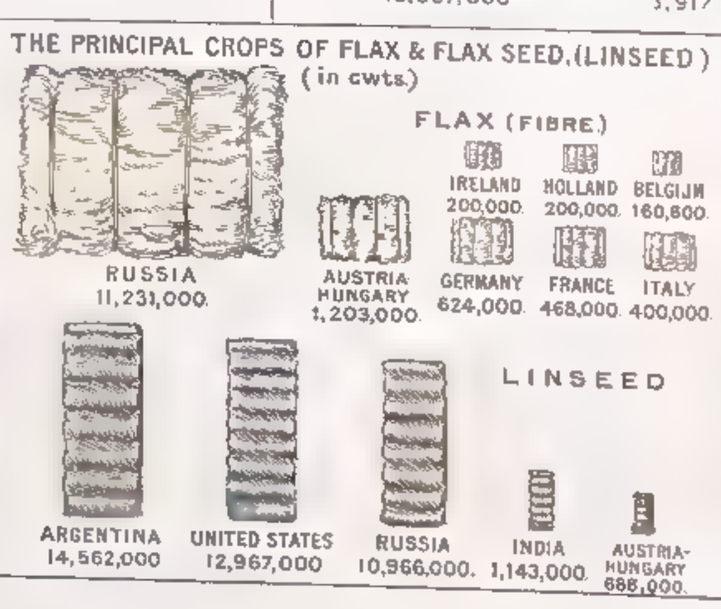
COTTON MANUFACTURING.—The total value of cotton goods entering international commerce exceeds £150,000,000 annually, of which the Eastern people purchase two-fifths. More than half of these exports are British. Cotton manufacture forms England's greatest industry, and is centred in Bolton (which contains about one-third of the spindles), and a few other Lancashire towns. £400,000,000 is embarked in the industry, the exports of which are five times the value of the cottons produced for home consumption.

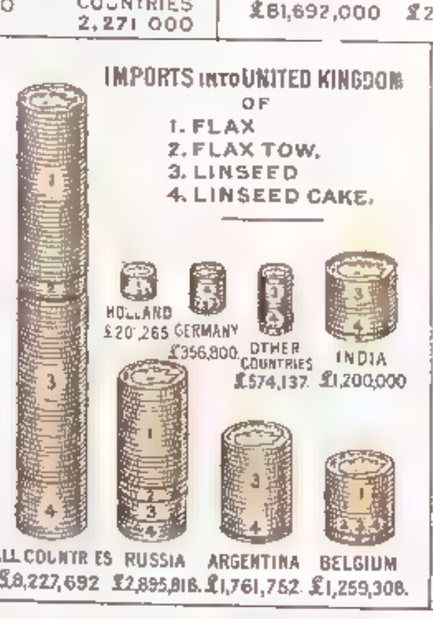
The value of the United States exports of raw cotton and cotton goods is as 5 to 1. The manufacturing industry is widely distributed among both the North and South States; the Fall River district, Massachusetts, having the most spindles. In Germany—the second largest exporter of cotton goods—the Rhine Province and Westphalia own most spindles, but Bavaria, Alsatia, Saxony, Würtemberg and Baden also share largely in the industry. New Sources of Cotton Supply.—Britain, France and Germany are all engaged upon systematic experimental cotton growing in their respective colonies, in order to be independent of the American crop. The British Cotton Growing Association believes that, with improved transport, N. Nigeria, with its area of over 200,000,000 acres and population of 10,000,000, will develop into a cotton growing country, second in importance only to America. Another 100,000,000 acres of cotton lands are available in the rest of Brit. W. Africa. Plantations have been established in Brit. S. and Cent. Africa, the W. Indies, Ceylon, the Sudan, Queensland, Malta, Cyprus, Fiji, Honduras, and British Guiana. The French have plantations in Senegal and Cochin China, and Germany in Togo, German East Africa, and Kamerun. Huge tracts of suitable cotton lands are available in S. America, especially in Argentina and in Peru.

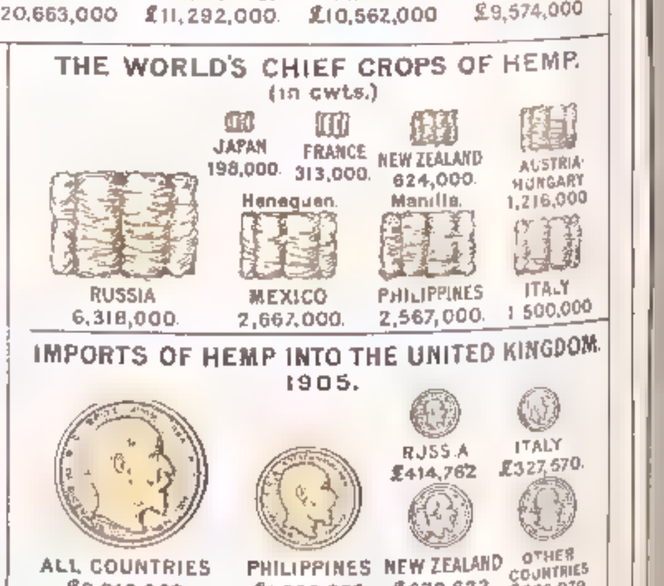




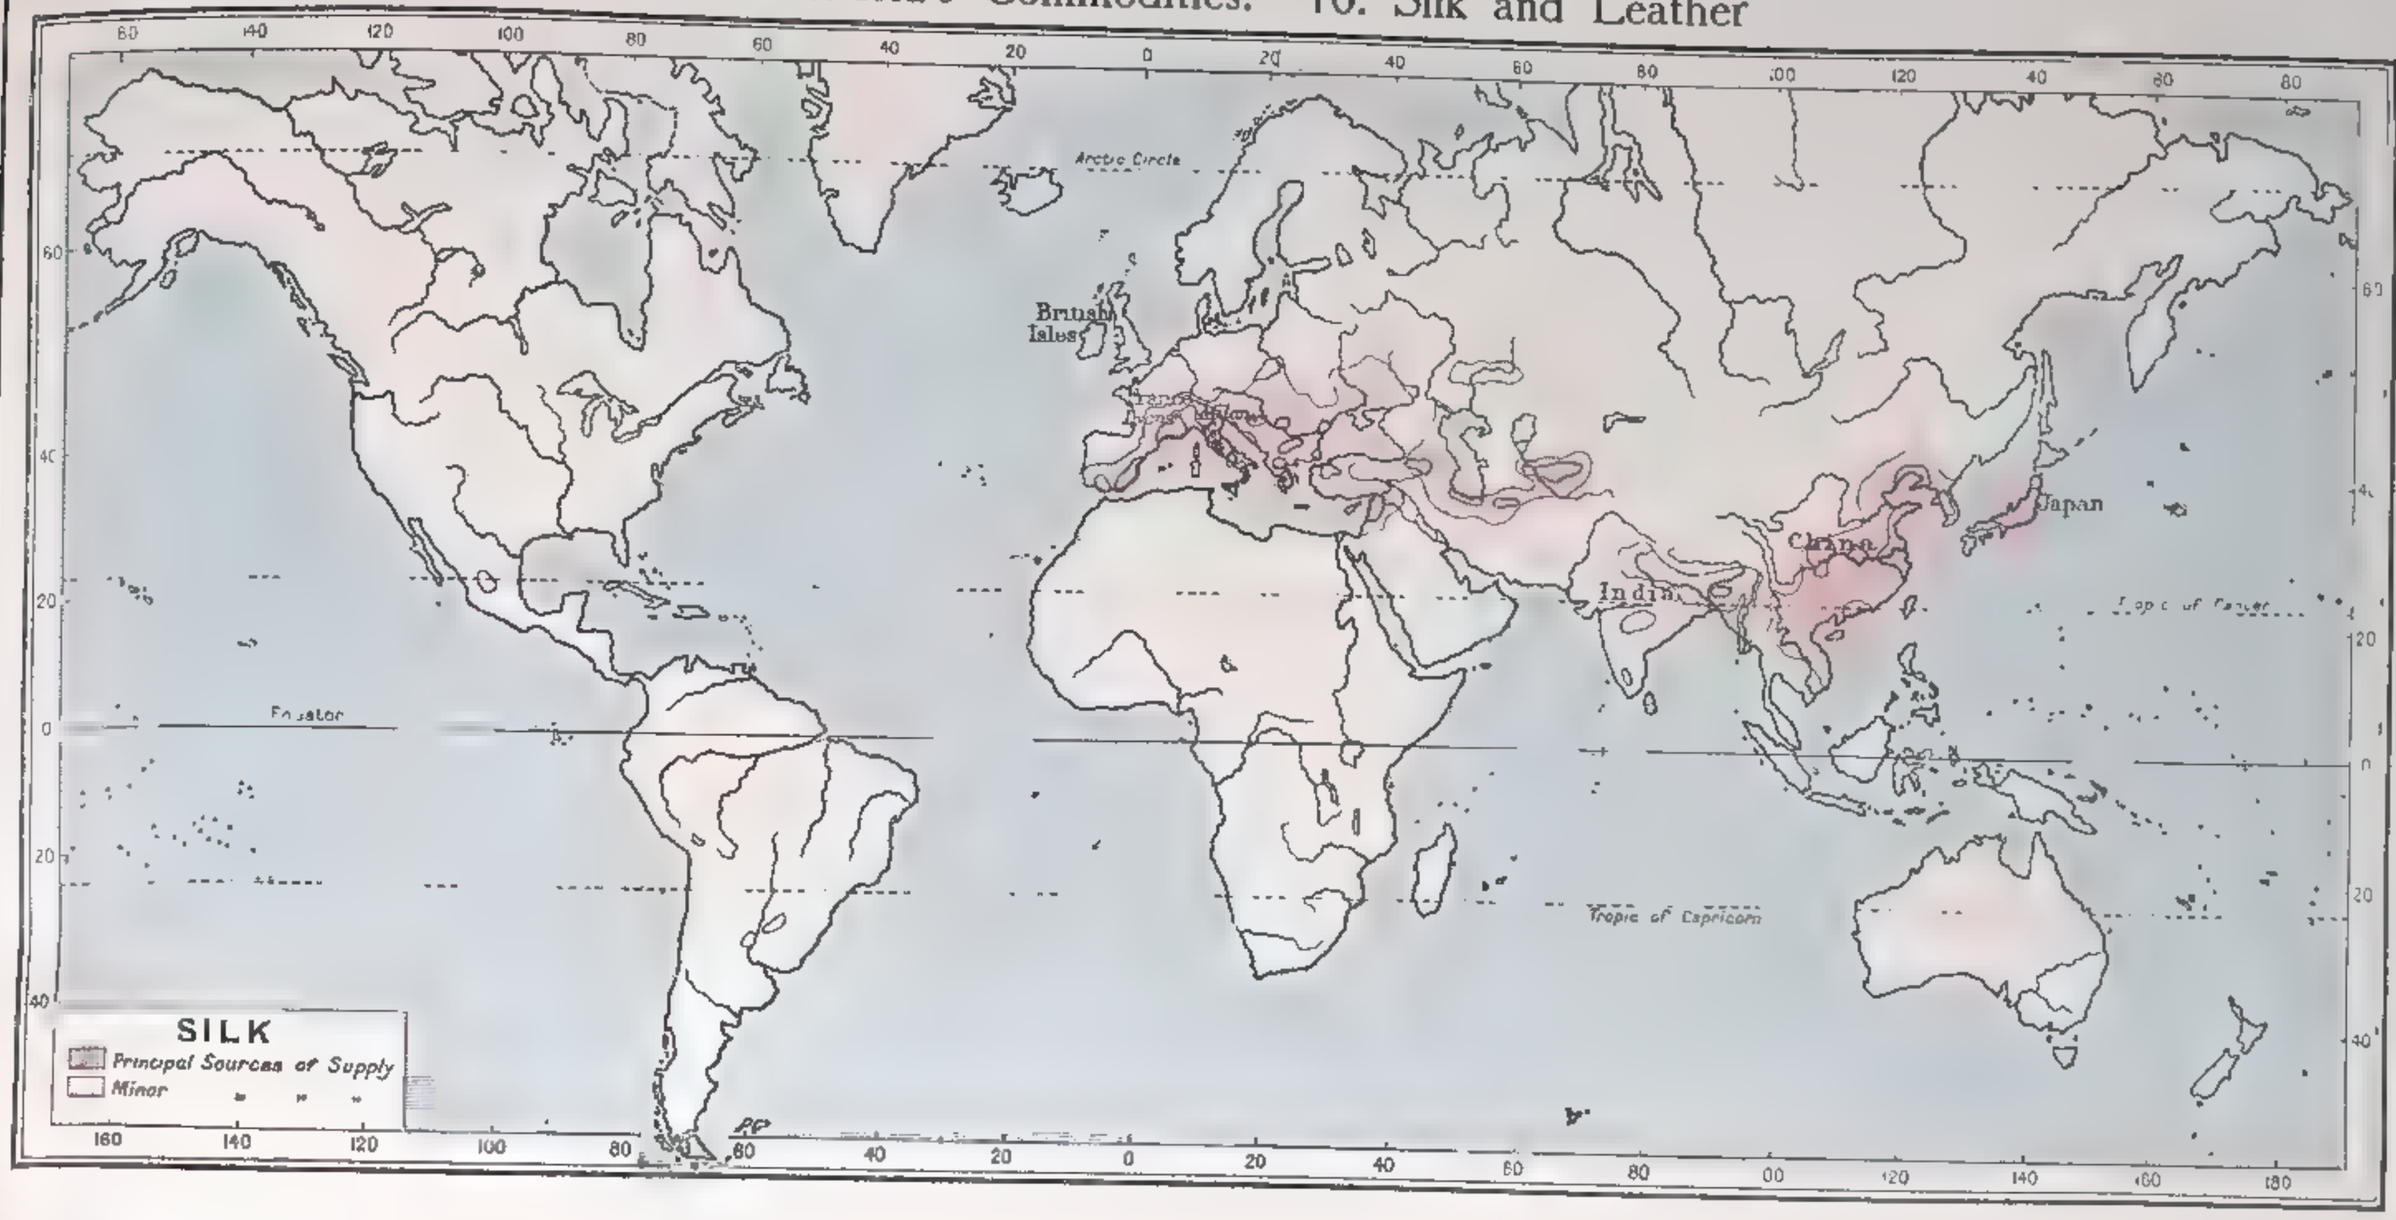








The World's Commodities.—10. Silk and Leather



SILK.—The chief variety of the silkworm in cultivation is the Bombyx Mori; Japan, China and Italy, which produce three-fourths of the world's silk, raising this kind extensively. In S. China, India, and elsewhere in Asia, other (mostly wild) varieties exist, including Bombyx tector, Antheræa mylitta (tussore) and Antheræa yamamai (Japanese silk). The wild silkworm is found in many parts of Central and S. America, Africa and Asia, but the S. American and African silks do not enter into commerce. The Far East contributes about three-fifths and W. Europe one-fourth of the world's supply of raw silk, the remainder coming from the Levant and Central Asia. The diagrams giving the present production show that silk is for the most part produced in countries possessing cheap labour. This is an essential condition, since over 1,000 cocoons go to the pound (in poor samples double that number), and the pound is only worth from one shilling to one shilling and sixpence. Artificial silk, manufactured from wood pulp, and mercerised cotton, extremely like silk in appearance, are beginning to compete with the natural product. Silk is one of the chief exports of Japan, China, and Italy. In Japan it is cultivated universally, in China chiefly in the S.E. provinces, and in Italy in the north, principally in Lombardy, but also in Piedmont and Venetia while the manufacturing industry centres at Como. The softening of the cocoons in warm water and spinning of the fibre are performed locally, but the spun silk is "conditioned," i.e., dried at a temperature of 68-84° F., weighed, and tested principally at European centres, the chief of which are Milan (which has displaced Lyons, Shanghai and Canton as the principal silk mart of the world), Lyons, Zürich, St. Etienne, Elberfeld, Turin, Basle, and Crefeld. France is the chief silk manufacturing country, the annual output of Lyons being valued at £16,000,000, and that of St. Etienne at £3,350,000. The particular quality of silk made in Japan is a peasant industry, and is produced nowhere else. It is extraordinary cheap and very thin in texture. The silk industry of the United Kingdom has greatly declined since the opening of the Suez Canal, as the raw silk from the East now goes direct to the French and Italian ports, but it is still carried on at Macclesfield and Congleton, Manchester, London, Nottingham, Leicester, Derby, Yorkshire, Norwich, Coventry, Leek, Sherborne, Frome, Glasgow and Dublin, the last named being noted for poplins, made from a mixture of silk and wool. More "waste" silk than raw spun silk is now imported into Great Britain, and is used in the manufacture of velvets, sewing silks, braid, etc.

The LEATHER of commerce is obtained chiefly from the hides of the principal domesticated animals—the ox, sheep, horse, pig, and goat, but leathers can be made from all animals, and useful kinds are obtained from the white whale (porpoise hide), the manatee, dugong, crocodile, and alligator. As most countries export hides and skins in some quantity, a map showing its distribution is unnecessary, though reference can be made to the map showing meat supplies (page 10), which gives the distribution of the chief hide-producing animals. Argentina, the United States, India, Germany, and France furnish the chief supplies of leather. Germany is the greatest leather manufacturing country, a speciality being coloured leathers. France, noted for her glove and patent leathers, comes second, and then the United States and Great Britain. Russia leather, the product of the Russian industry, is tanned with birch bark, to which it owes its peculiar odour, and Morocco leather is made from goatskin—the surface being roughened with a stamp. Some 50 or 60 tanning agents are now in use, including compounds of the metal chromium, displacing generally the use of oak bark in tanning, though this tannage is still used in Bermondsey, and partly accounts for the fine quality of English leathers.

TIMBER.—The most valuable Timber producing regions of the world lie in the North Temperate Zone, as the extensive forests of the tropics produce woods of less general utility and are less accessible to the markets of the world. The chief timber exporting countries are the United States, Austria-Hungary, Sweden, Canada, Russia, Finland and Norway. Canada, with an estimated forest area of 800,000,000 acres, is the country richest in timber resources, whilst the United States have 60,000,000 and Russia over 500,000,000 acres. Timber is generally classed as "hard" or "soft"; the former including oak, poplar, walnut, ash, chestnut, hickory, cotton wood and gum, and the latter the conifers, such as white and yellow pine, hemlock, spruce, Douglas fir and red wood. The conifers come from the Baltic countries, North America, and, in small quantities, from Tasmania. Three-fourths of the timber production in the United States consists of conifers, yellow and white pine being the most important varieties. Hard woods are grown chiefly in South America and Australia; jarrah and karri are the principal woods of Western Australia, jarrah being used for railway sleepers, bridge building, etc., and karri for wood paving and wagon work. Teak, a very hard, durable wood used in shipbuilding, comes from Burma and the E. Indies. The hard black wood known as ebony is derived from various trees, mostly native to India. Mahogany is obtained chiefly from the West Indies, Central and South America, and West Africa; cedar from Central America and the West Indies, and Quebracho, used in tanning, from the River Plate district. Algeria supplies more cork than all the rest of the world. The woodlands of the United Kingdom cover 3,070,000 acres. The British annual production of timber is estimated at 2,000,000 tons, and the total consumption at over 11,290,000 tons

The olive tree belongs to Southern Europe and probably also to Asia Minor. It is cultivated in all the Mediterranean countries and in Mesopotamia and Persia, and has recently been introduced to California, Louisiana and Mexico. The African oil palm (Guineensis) grows abundantly along the west coast of Africa, and particularly in the Gold Coast and Nigeria. A similar oil-yielding palm is found in Zanzibar and the Philippines. Coco-nuts are indigenous to the maritime parts of the Old World Tropics. Our supplies of copra (the dried kernels of the coco-nut) and oil come chiefly from Ceylon, Fiji, and other South Sea islands, Madras and Mauritius.

The use of GOLD has been known from the earliest times, but gold mining, as it is understood to-day, dates from the middle of last century, while the cyanide process enabling low-grade mines to be worked at a profit is quite a recent discovery. The simplest method of recovering gold is placer mining, or the washing of the auriferous alluvial deposits of rivers. In the modern scientific extraction of gold from the rock an expensive plant is required. The ore is mined, and brought to the stamps to be crushed and milled, and the gold is then separated by the cyanide or other chemical process. The world's production of gold in 1851 was estimated at £17,000,000, of which the United States produced £11,000,000. In 1905 it had risen to £75,636,000, of which the Transvaal, the United States and Australia together supplied nearly three-fourths. The principal Transvaal goldfields are those of the Witwatersrand, Barberton, Lydenburg, and Waterberg. The total Transvaal annual production sank, during the recent South African war, from £16,000,000 in 1899, when over 6,000 stamps were at work, to less than £2,250,000 in 1901. At the present time some 7,300 stamps are at work with an average monthly yield of nearly half a million ounces of fine gold. Rhodesia also possesses rich goldfields, which are being actively developed. The chief gold mining regions of the United States, where much of the gold is recovered by hydraulic jet, are Colorado, California and South Dakota. In Australia, Western Australia produces annually some 2,000,000 ozs. of fine gold, more than double that of any other State of the Commonwealth, the East Coolgardie Field being by far the most important. Then follow Victoria, Queensland, New South Wales, Tasmania and South Australia in the order named. In Canada the chief goldfields are the Klondike in the Yukon district, where dredging is being largely resorted to, British Columbia, with the Cariboo "placer" district, Nova Scotia and Ontario. The Russia output is derived mainly from alluvial deposits in the Urals.

DIAMONDS are merely carbon crystallized by heat and pressure, and their presence is directly attributable to volcanic agency. In South Africa there is a recognized "blue-ground" rock, and the stones are found in large pockets or pipes. In Brazil, diamonds are found in small pockets over an area thousands of square miles in extent, and, being generally in positions inaccessible to extensive machinery, their profitable working is hampered. The cutting and polishing of diamonds was till recently a Dutch monopoly, but to-day the stones are also cut in London, Paris, and the United States. South Africa produces seven-eighths of the world's total output, the chief supplies coming from the Kimberley (De Beers) mines in Cape Colony, while the output from the Orange River Colony (the Jagersfontein mines) and the Transvaal (the Premier mine) is developing rapidly.

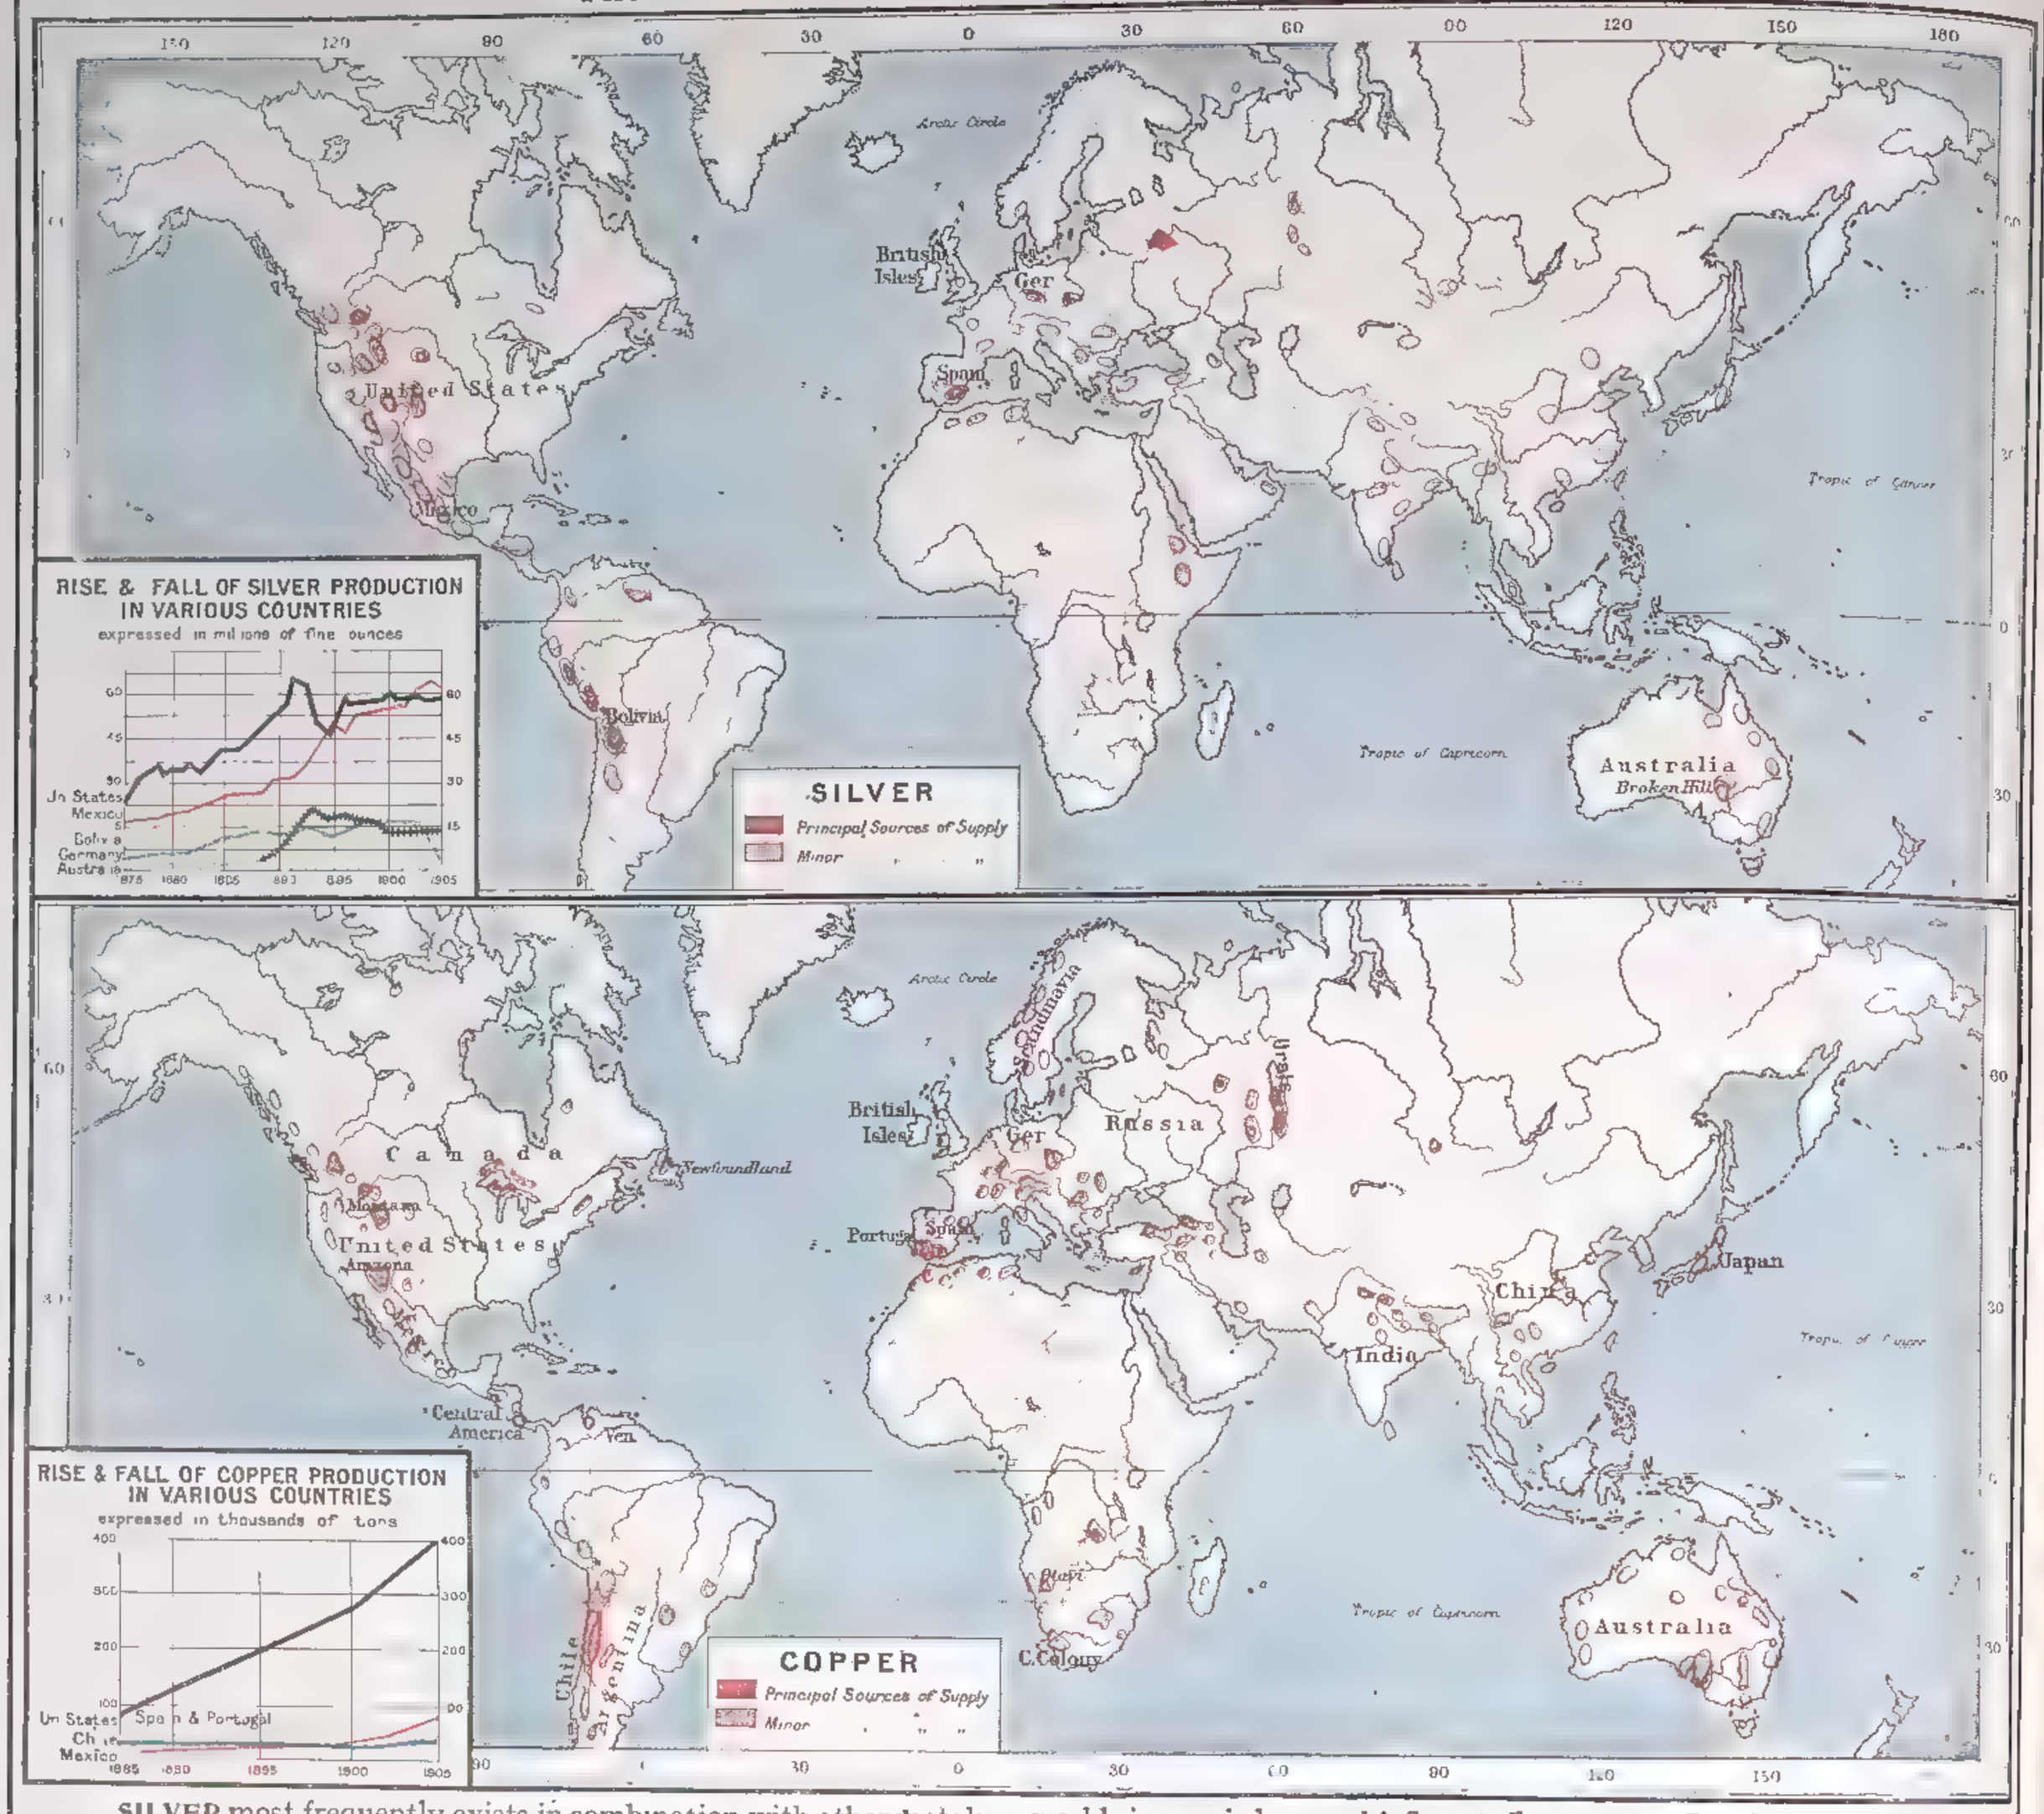
The World's Commodities.—13. Silver and Copper



SILVER most frequently exists in combination with other metals, nearly half the world's output in recent years having been desilvered from ores mined for other metals than silver. It is nearly always contained in the galena lead ore, and where it occurs in its native state the deposits are invariably small. The largest "pockets" have been found in the United States, which with Mexico together contribute nearly three-fourths of the world's supply of silver. In Mexico the chief mines lie in the Central States. In the United States Colorado produces most silver, and it is also mined in Montana, Utah, Idaho, Nevada, Arizona. Silver has been found in all the Australian States, but chiefly in New South Wales, at Silverton and Broken Hill. In Canada, Cobalt has become an important silver mining district.

COPPER is widely distributed, but for the last fifty years the United States has been the chief producer. Great Britain now produces little copper, but the smelting of the ore from all parts of the world is carried on, chiefly at Swansea. In the United States, Montana, with about one-third of the country's output, Michigan, with more than one-fourth, Arizona, Utah, California and Colorado are the chief copper bearing regions. In Mexico the chief mines are those of Boleo in Lower California, and Cananea in Sonora. Chile is still rich in copper, though the industry has declined, and it is extensively mined in the Corocoro district of Bolivia. In Australia, copper forms the most important mineral raised in Tasmania and South Australia, and it is also raised in Western Australia, Queensland, and New South Wales. British Columbia is the richest copper province of Canada. Namaqua Land is the only copper district of Cape Colony, but copper mining is being developed in Rhodesia. The diagram shows 1905–6 values, abnormal values prevailing in 1906–7, when standard copper reached £109½ per ton, compared with £81, an increase of 35 per cent.

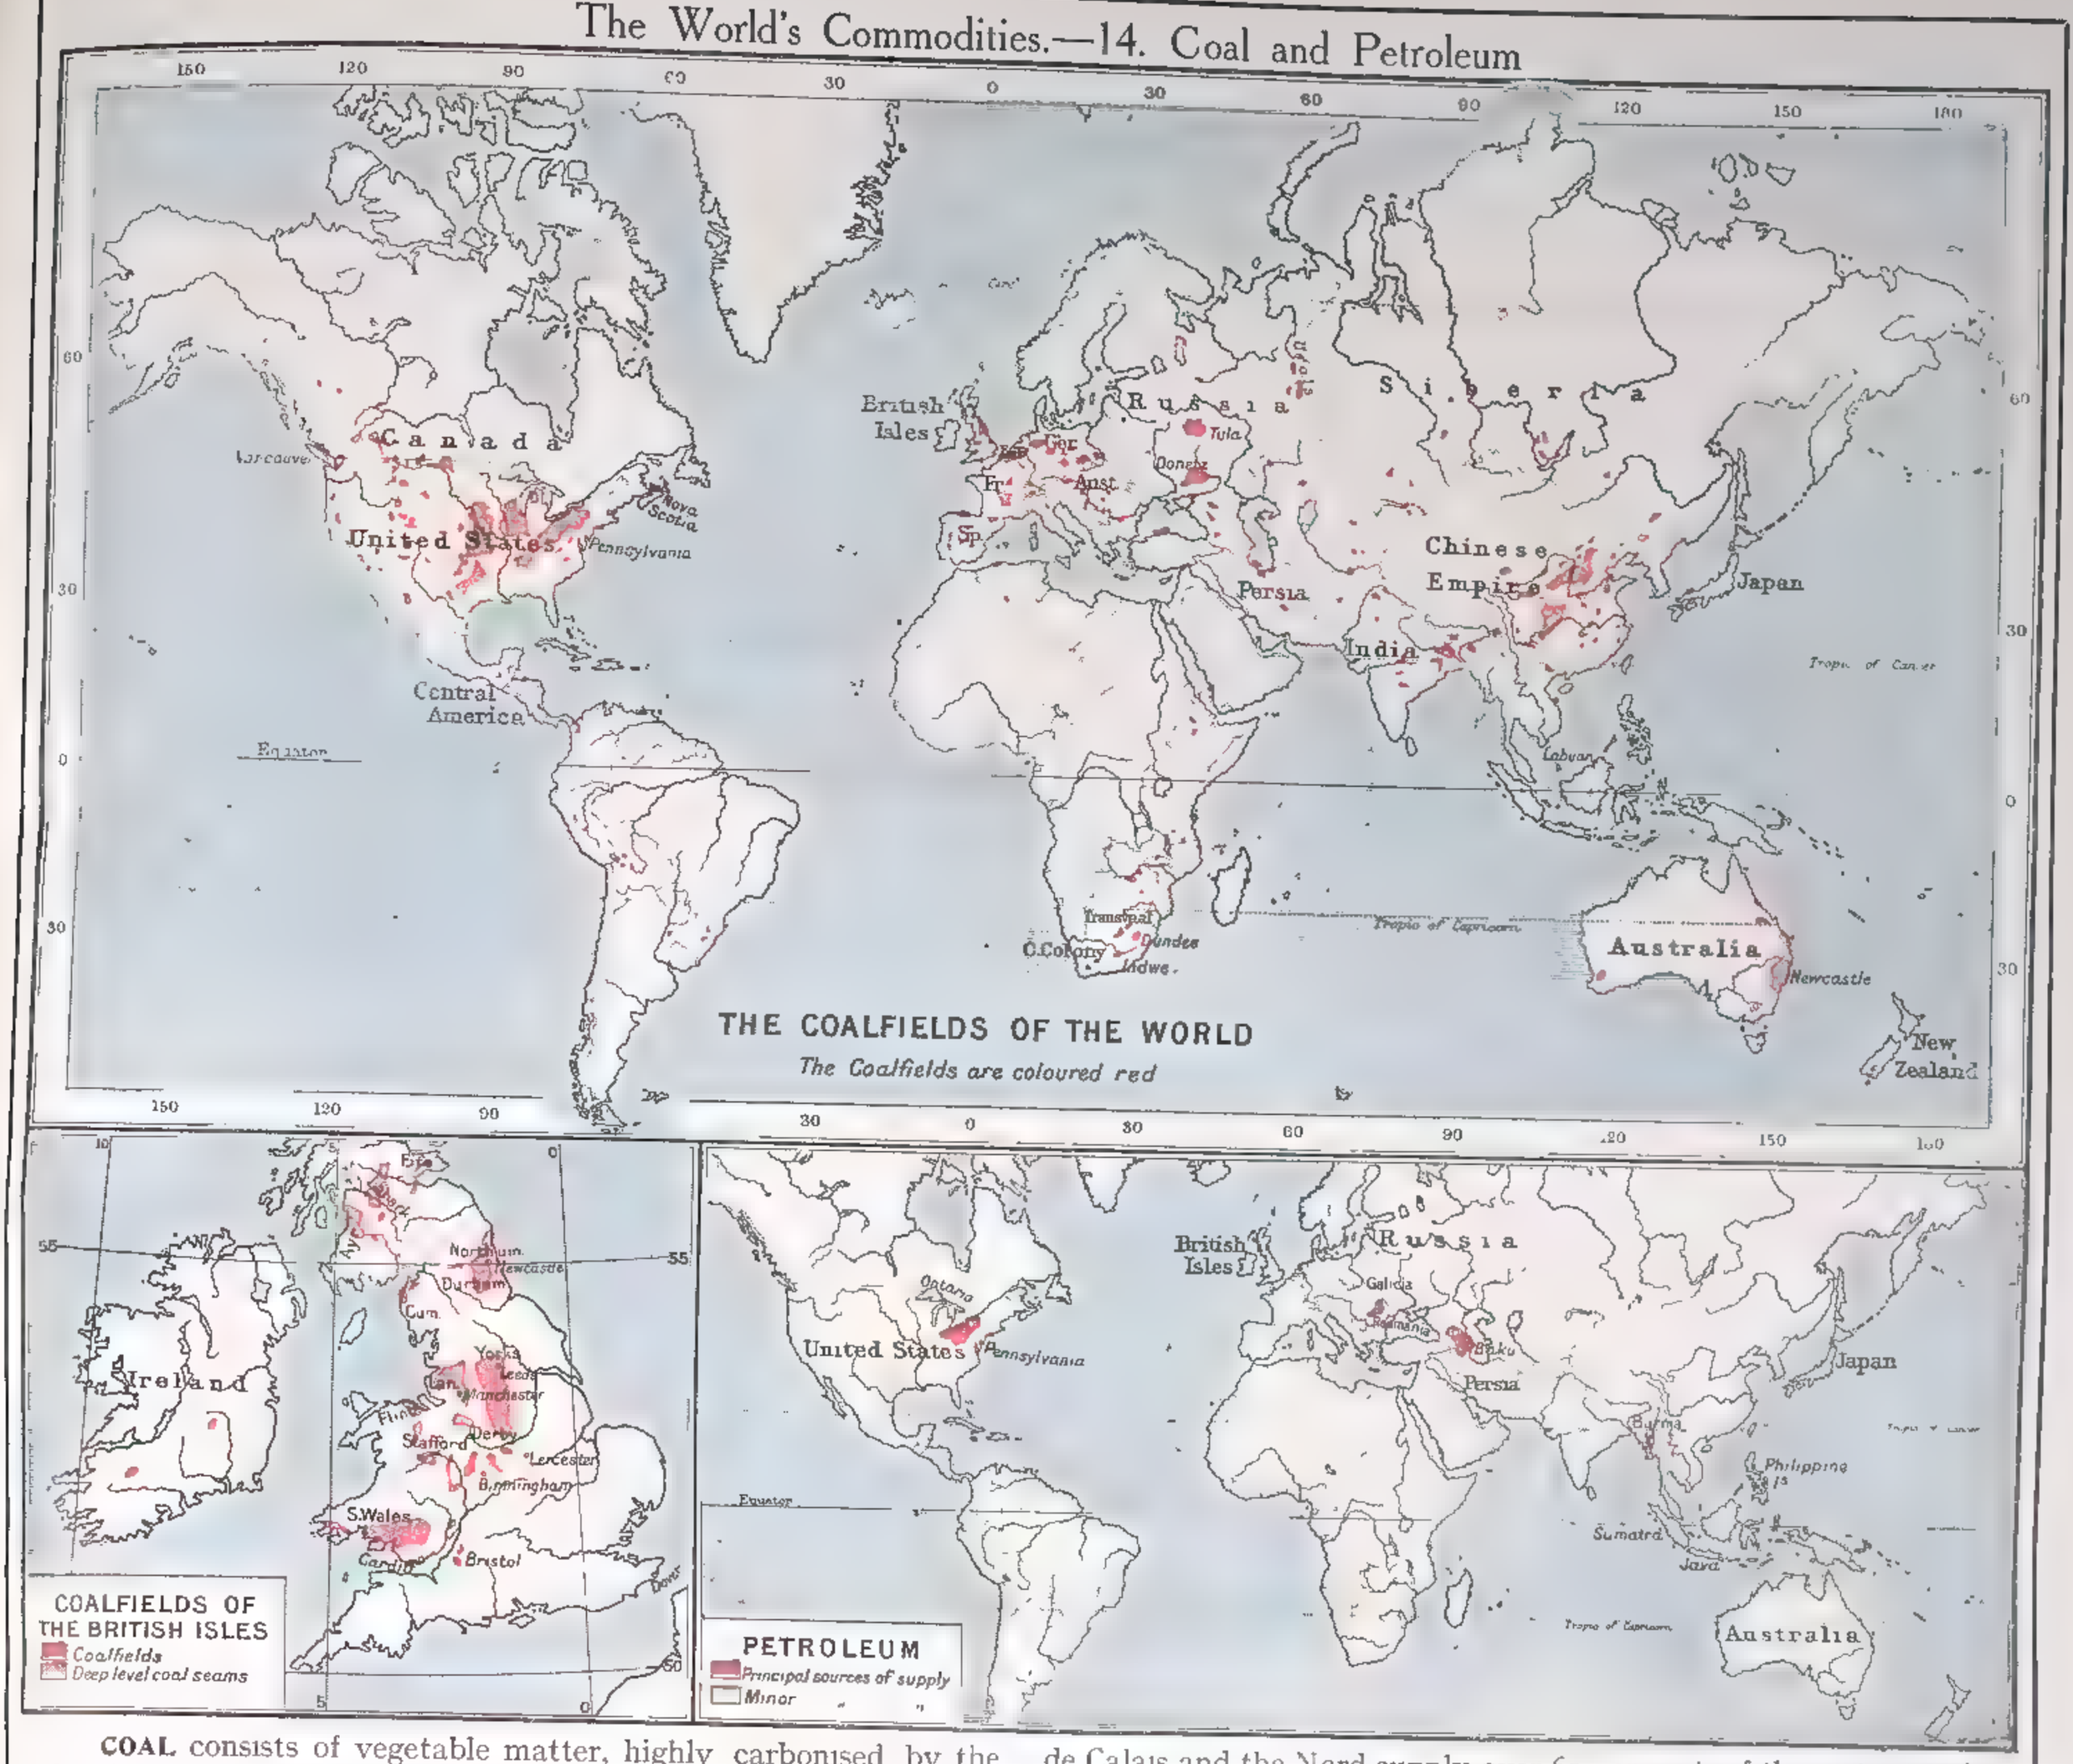
The World's Commodities.—14. Coal and Petroleum



COAL consists of vegetable matter, highly carbonised by the chemical changes it has suffered during the ages it has lain beneath the earth's surface. Anthracite contains frequently 94 per cent. of carbon, bituminous coal 85 per cent., and lignite 70 per cent. The British Coalfields and deposits of iron ore are advantageously situated near seaports, and consequently great industries have sprung up in their neighbourhood. The coal output of the United States has increased about 100,000,000 tons in the last five years; half the total supply is Anthracite from the Pennsylvania coalfields, while 55 per cent. of the bituminous coal produced comes from the Appalachian coalfield. In Canada, coal is mined in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia. The chief coalfields of Germany lie in Westphalia, the lower Rhinel Silesia, and the Rhenish district near Saarbrücken and Aix la Chapelle. In France the departments of Pas de Calais and the Nord supply over 60 per cent. of the output; the Charleroi mines produce one-third of the Belgian supply, and the Ekaterinoslav and Polish mines together yield 90 per cent. of the increasing output in Russia. The leading countries are largely increasing their output. In 1905 the United States raised 350,821,000 tons and the United Kingdom 236,111,000 tons, while in 1906 the United Kingdom's production reached 251,050,000 tons.

Half the world's supply of PETROLEUM is drawn from the oil wells of the United States, the chief producing states being California, Ohio, Texas, W. Virginia, Pennsylvania, Indiana, New York and Kansas. Russian petroleum comes principally from Baku and Grozny, and new oilfields are being developed in Archangel and Vologda. Other oilfields are worked in Roumania, Austria-Hungary, Java, Sumatra, Burma, Assam, Canada and Japan.

The World's Commodities.—15. Iron Ore

IRON ORE.—Iron, perhaps the most widely distributed of all the base metals, is derived as to two-thirds of the output, from the United States, Germany and Great Britain. Of the annual world's output, amounting to about 125 million tons, these three countries produce over 82 million tons. The United States have by far the greatest output (over 44 million tons). More than half the States raise iron ore, but fully two-thirds of the production is concentrated in the Lake Superior Region (in Minnesota, Michigan, and Wisconsin). The other chief iron-ore states in America are Alabama, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Tennessee.

In Germany, which has the second largest output of iron-ore, the chief mining districts are in Lorraine, Luxemburg, the Siegen district, and the Duchy of Nassau. In England, the Cleveland district and Staffordshire are the chief iron-mining districts, and Scotland raises over 800,000 tons. The world's output of iron-ore has increased enormously within the last fifteen years. In 1890 it was 55,588,000 tons, in 1904, 92,310,000 tons, and, at the present time, it is estimated to be 125,000,000 tons. Great Britain is more dependent upon foreign (i.e., imported) ores than any other large producer of iron. Six-sevenths of our iron-ore imports come from Spain and Norway—the iron mines in both countries being worked almost entirely by British capital. Germany virtually controls the Swedish iron mines. Besides the countries shown in the accompanying diagram of iron-ore production, Canada, Norway, Mexico, Newfoundland, Belgium, Algeria, India, and Japan are small producers, but the resources of the first three named are being rapidly developed. In South America, Australia, South Africa, and China, important iron-ore fields are known to exist, but they remain unexploited, chiefly because they are mostly either difficult of access or cannot be profitably worked in the face of European and American competition.

PIG-IRON.—The production of pig-iron has enormously increased in the last 40 years. In 1865 it was 9¼ million tons, in 1900 over 40 million tons, and at the present time is estimated at over 55,000,000. The United States (23 million tons), Germany (11 millions), and the United Kingdom (9½ millions), at present contribute four-fifths of the world's supply of pig-iron. In 1865 Great Britain produced more than half of the world's iron; in 1890 the United States exceeded Great Britain's output, and to-day produces 42 per cent. of all iron made (actual tonnage, 22,992,380), while Great Britain's production represents 18 per cent. only (9,592,737 tons). In the same time Germany's share of the production has increased from 8 per cent. to 20 per cent. or to 10,987,623 tons.

France, Russia, and Belgium are the only other countries producing more than one million tons of pig-iron per annum. Canada, whose iron trade seems destined to become of immense value, had an output of less than 500,000 tons in 1905, but is now producing on a greater scale. Until a few years ago there were only 11 iron making nations. The industry has since been established in Japan, China, India, the Transvaal, Mexico and Bosnia. There are prospects of the industry being started in the near future in Queensland and New South Wales, New Zealand, Natal, Chile and Peru, and of its extension in India.

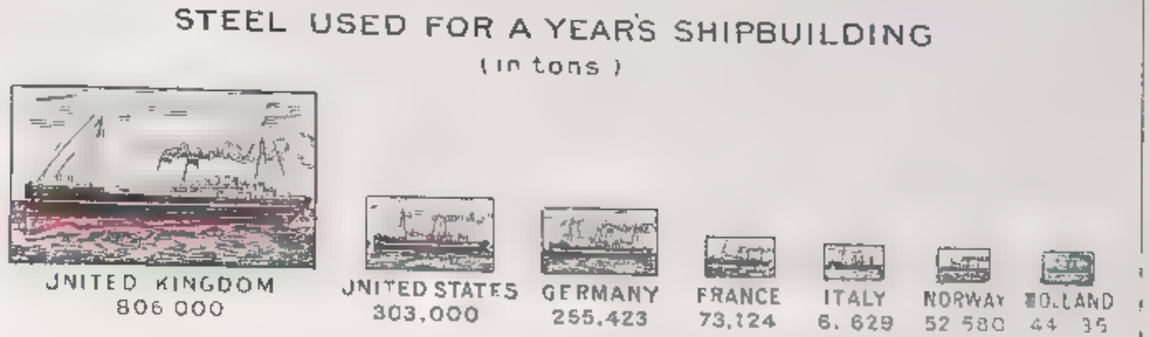
STEEL USED FOR A YEAR'S SHIPBUILDING
(in tons)



STEEL is a kind of metallic iron, containing a small proportion of combined carbon, and owing to the economy effected in its manufacture in recent years it has to a large extent taken the place of iron in the industrial world. The use of iron goes back to the remotest antiquity. Until comparatively recent times, iron smelting was carried on by means of wood or charcoal; the use of coal as fuel was first introduced early in the 17th century, and only became general in the middle of the 18th century. The use of coke was a further improvement, and in 1828 the hot-blast was introduced, since when, blast furnaces have been steadily improved and great economies of fuel effected. A still greater revolution in the iron trade was achieved when the manufacturing of steel from iron, by cementation, was given up in favour of the Bessemer and Siemen Martin (or open hearth) processes for producing steel in quantity direct. The drawback to these systems lay in the fact that they could not deal with iron containing phosphorus; but this difficulty was overcome in 1879 by the application of the "basic" process. By this invention, the United Kingdom, which formerly enjoyed a unique advantage over other iron-producing countries in possessing rich stores of hematite, an ore free from phosphorus, has lost the position of the premier steel producing country of the world; and the United States, the greater part of whose enormous output is actually required for the development of her own industries, now occupies this position. In the diagrams an attempt has been made to compare the exports of manufactures of iron and steel from the leading countries, and with the assistance of the Secretary of the British Iron Trade Association, we have been enabled to give the figures, but it should be understood that these are necessarily incomplete, the different classifications adopted by various Governments rendering an exact comparison impossible, and in such tables no distinction can be made between steel and iron. Moreover, an enormous quantity of iron and steel leaves this country in the form of shipping, and the comparative table showing the relative output of leading countries in shipping should be studied in conjunction with the other figures.

LEAD.—The United States, Spain, Germany, Australia and Mexico are the world's great sources of lead, a metal which is principally used for plumbing and bullet making.

TIN is derived almost exclusively from the Malay States, Bolivia and the Dutch East Indies. Only about 75,000 tons of tin actually entered into commerce in each of the three year ending March, 1907, but the price has fluctuated enormously The highest in 1906 was £215 per ton, against £166⅜ in 1905, and the difference between the highest and lowest has been £80 to £90 per ton.

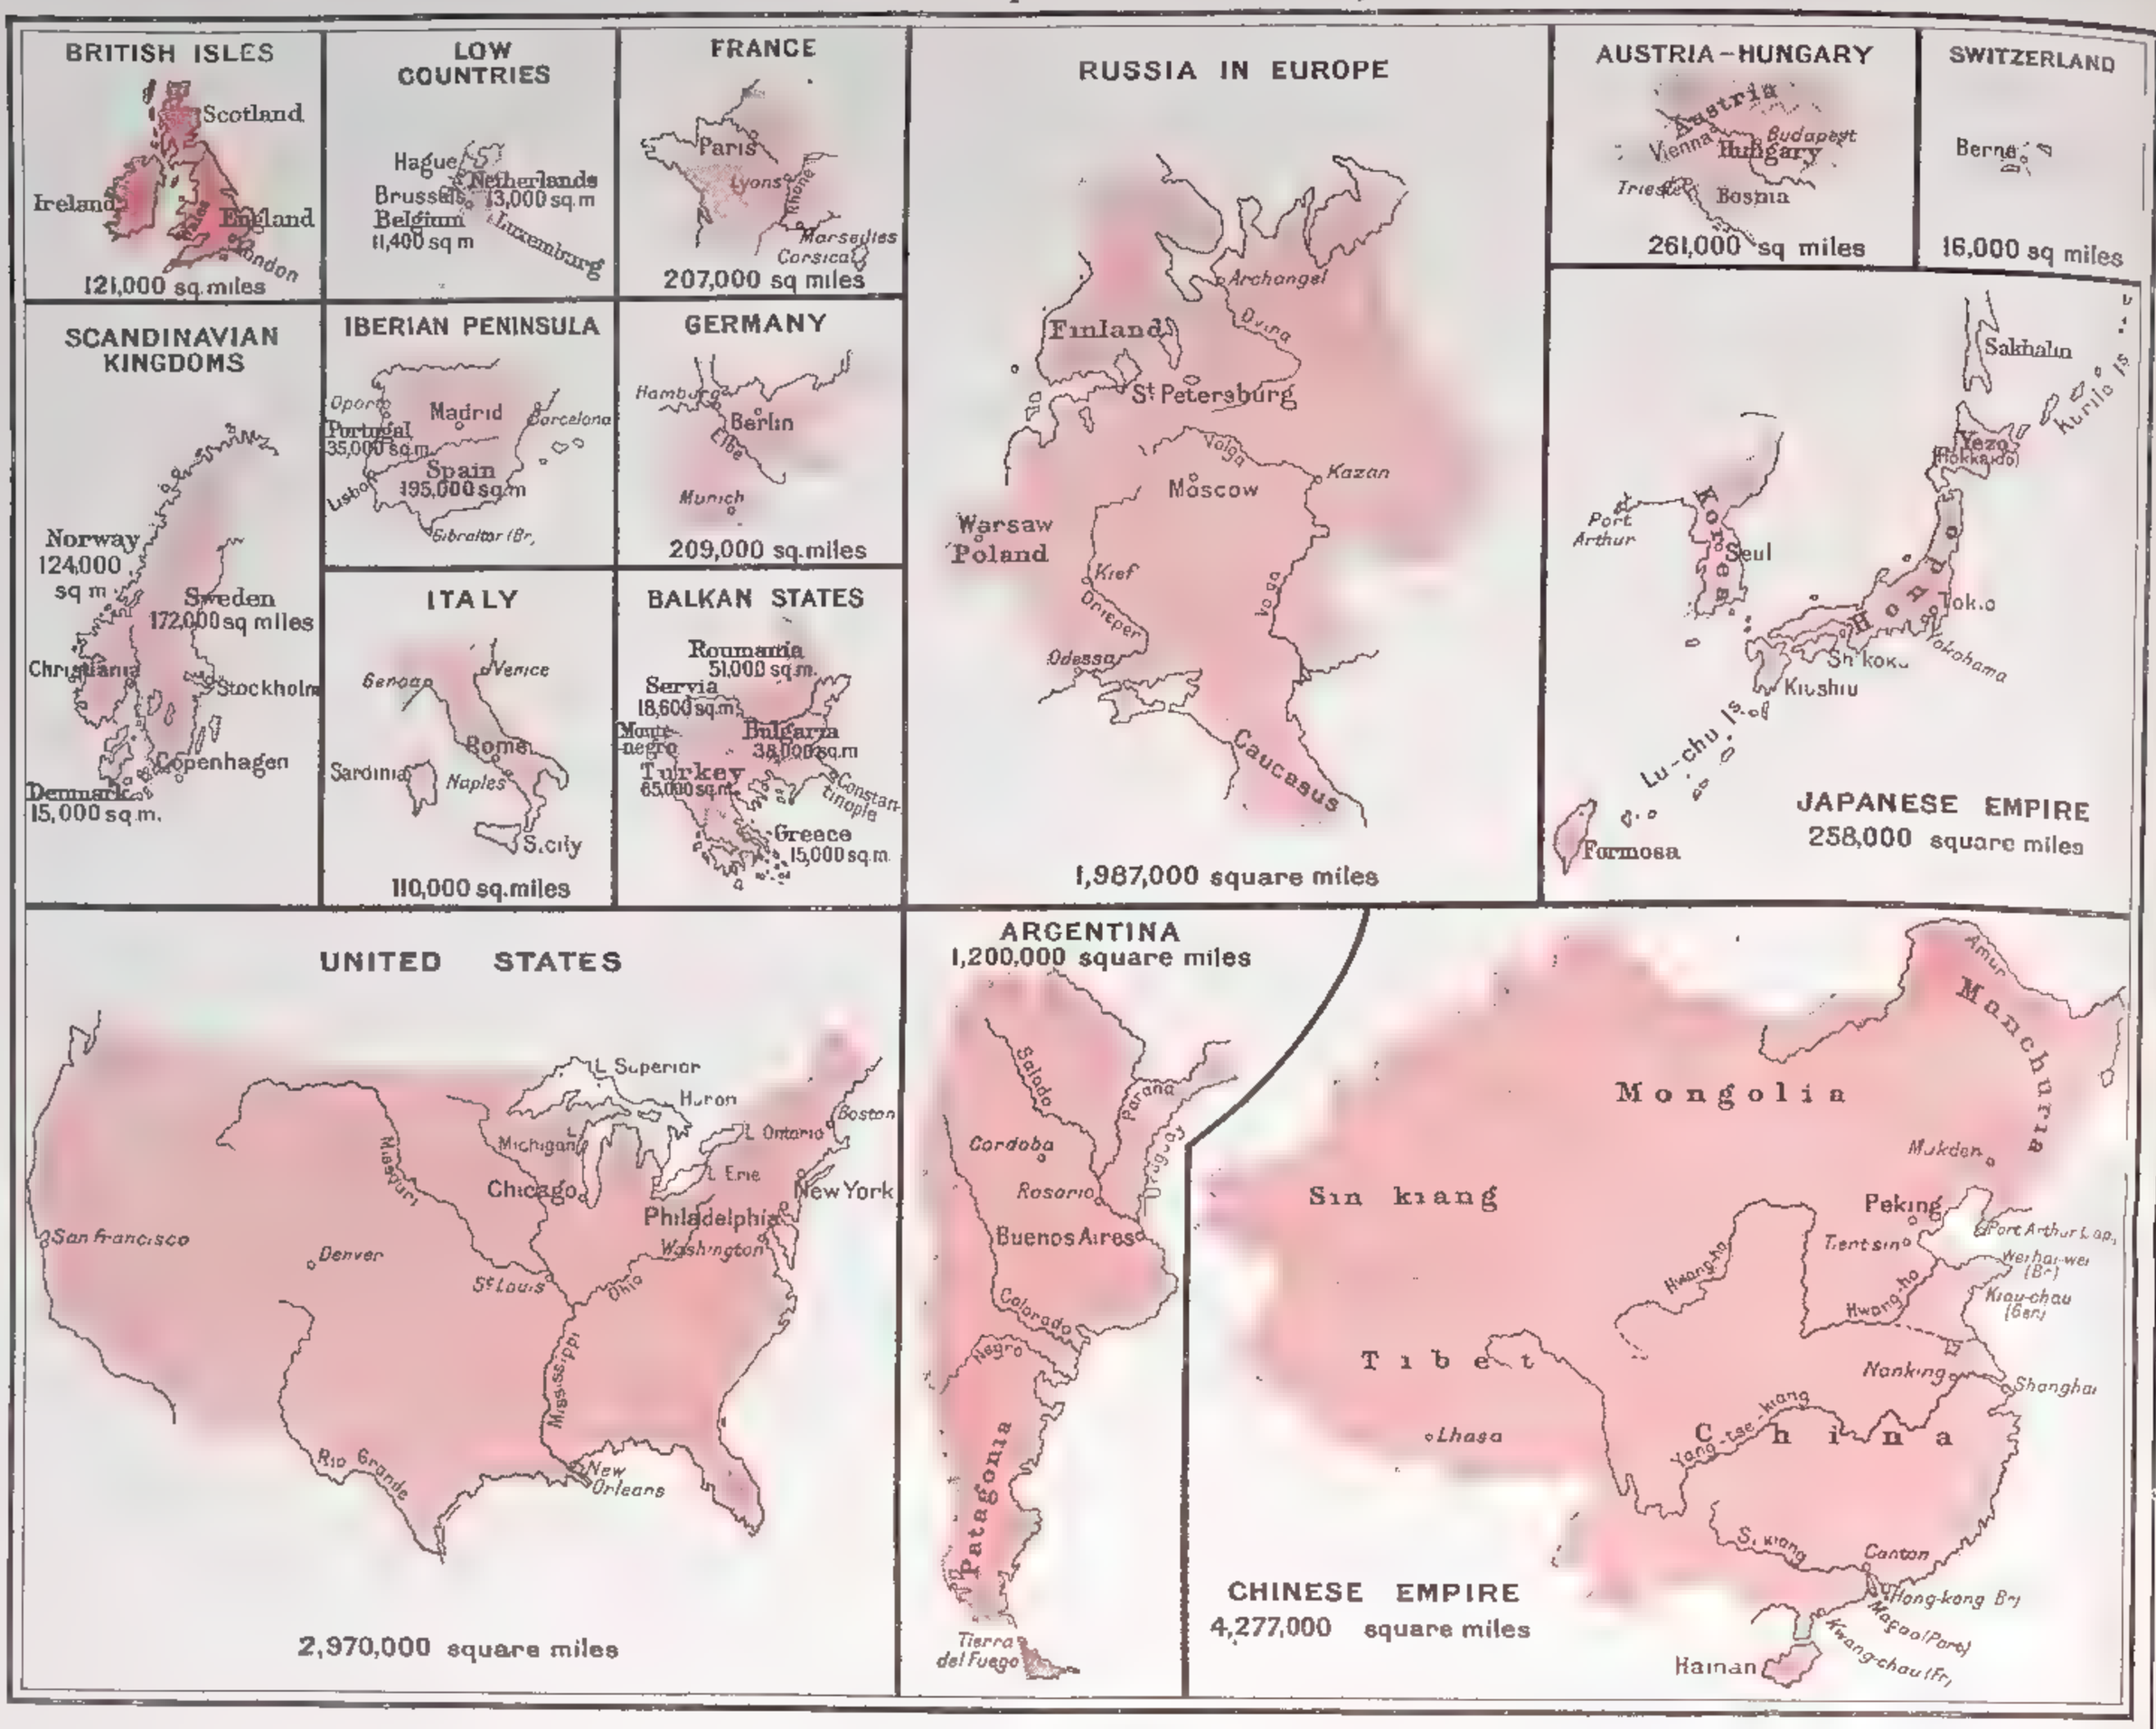
Relative Values and Comparisons.—1. Comparative Areas.



The same uniform scale of 1 : 50,000,000, or 790 miles to the inch, has been used for the above maps, as for those of the British possessions on page 3, so that the vast extent of the British Empire can be accurately compared with the area of the principal countries of the world. With the exceptions of China and Japan, maps of the Home Countries only are given on this page, but the diagrams below, showing the extent of the chief Empires of the World, exhibit the area of the Home Countries, and also of their colonies, dependencies, or other possessions.

Although the oceans really form one continuous sheet of water, they are divided for convenience of reference into five great divisions. The waters south of 40° S. lat. are frequently referred to as the Southern Ocean, but no exact limits are assigned to this division, and it is included in the areas of the other oceans. The Arctic and Antarctic Oceans are bounded towards the Equator by the Polar Circles, but the relative proportion of sea and land round the South Pole is still very conjectural. The land area of the globe is divided into six Continents, but in reality there are only two great land masses—the Old World and the New. Australia is indifferently described as the smallest continent or the largest island. There is no natural division between Europe and Asia, as the mountain range of the Urals forms a physical link between the two Continents rather than a line of demarcation, as is popularly supposed.

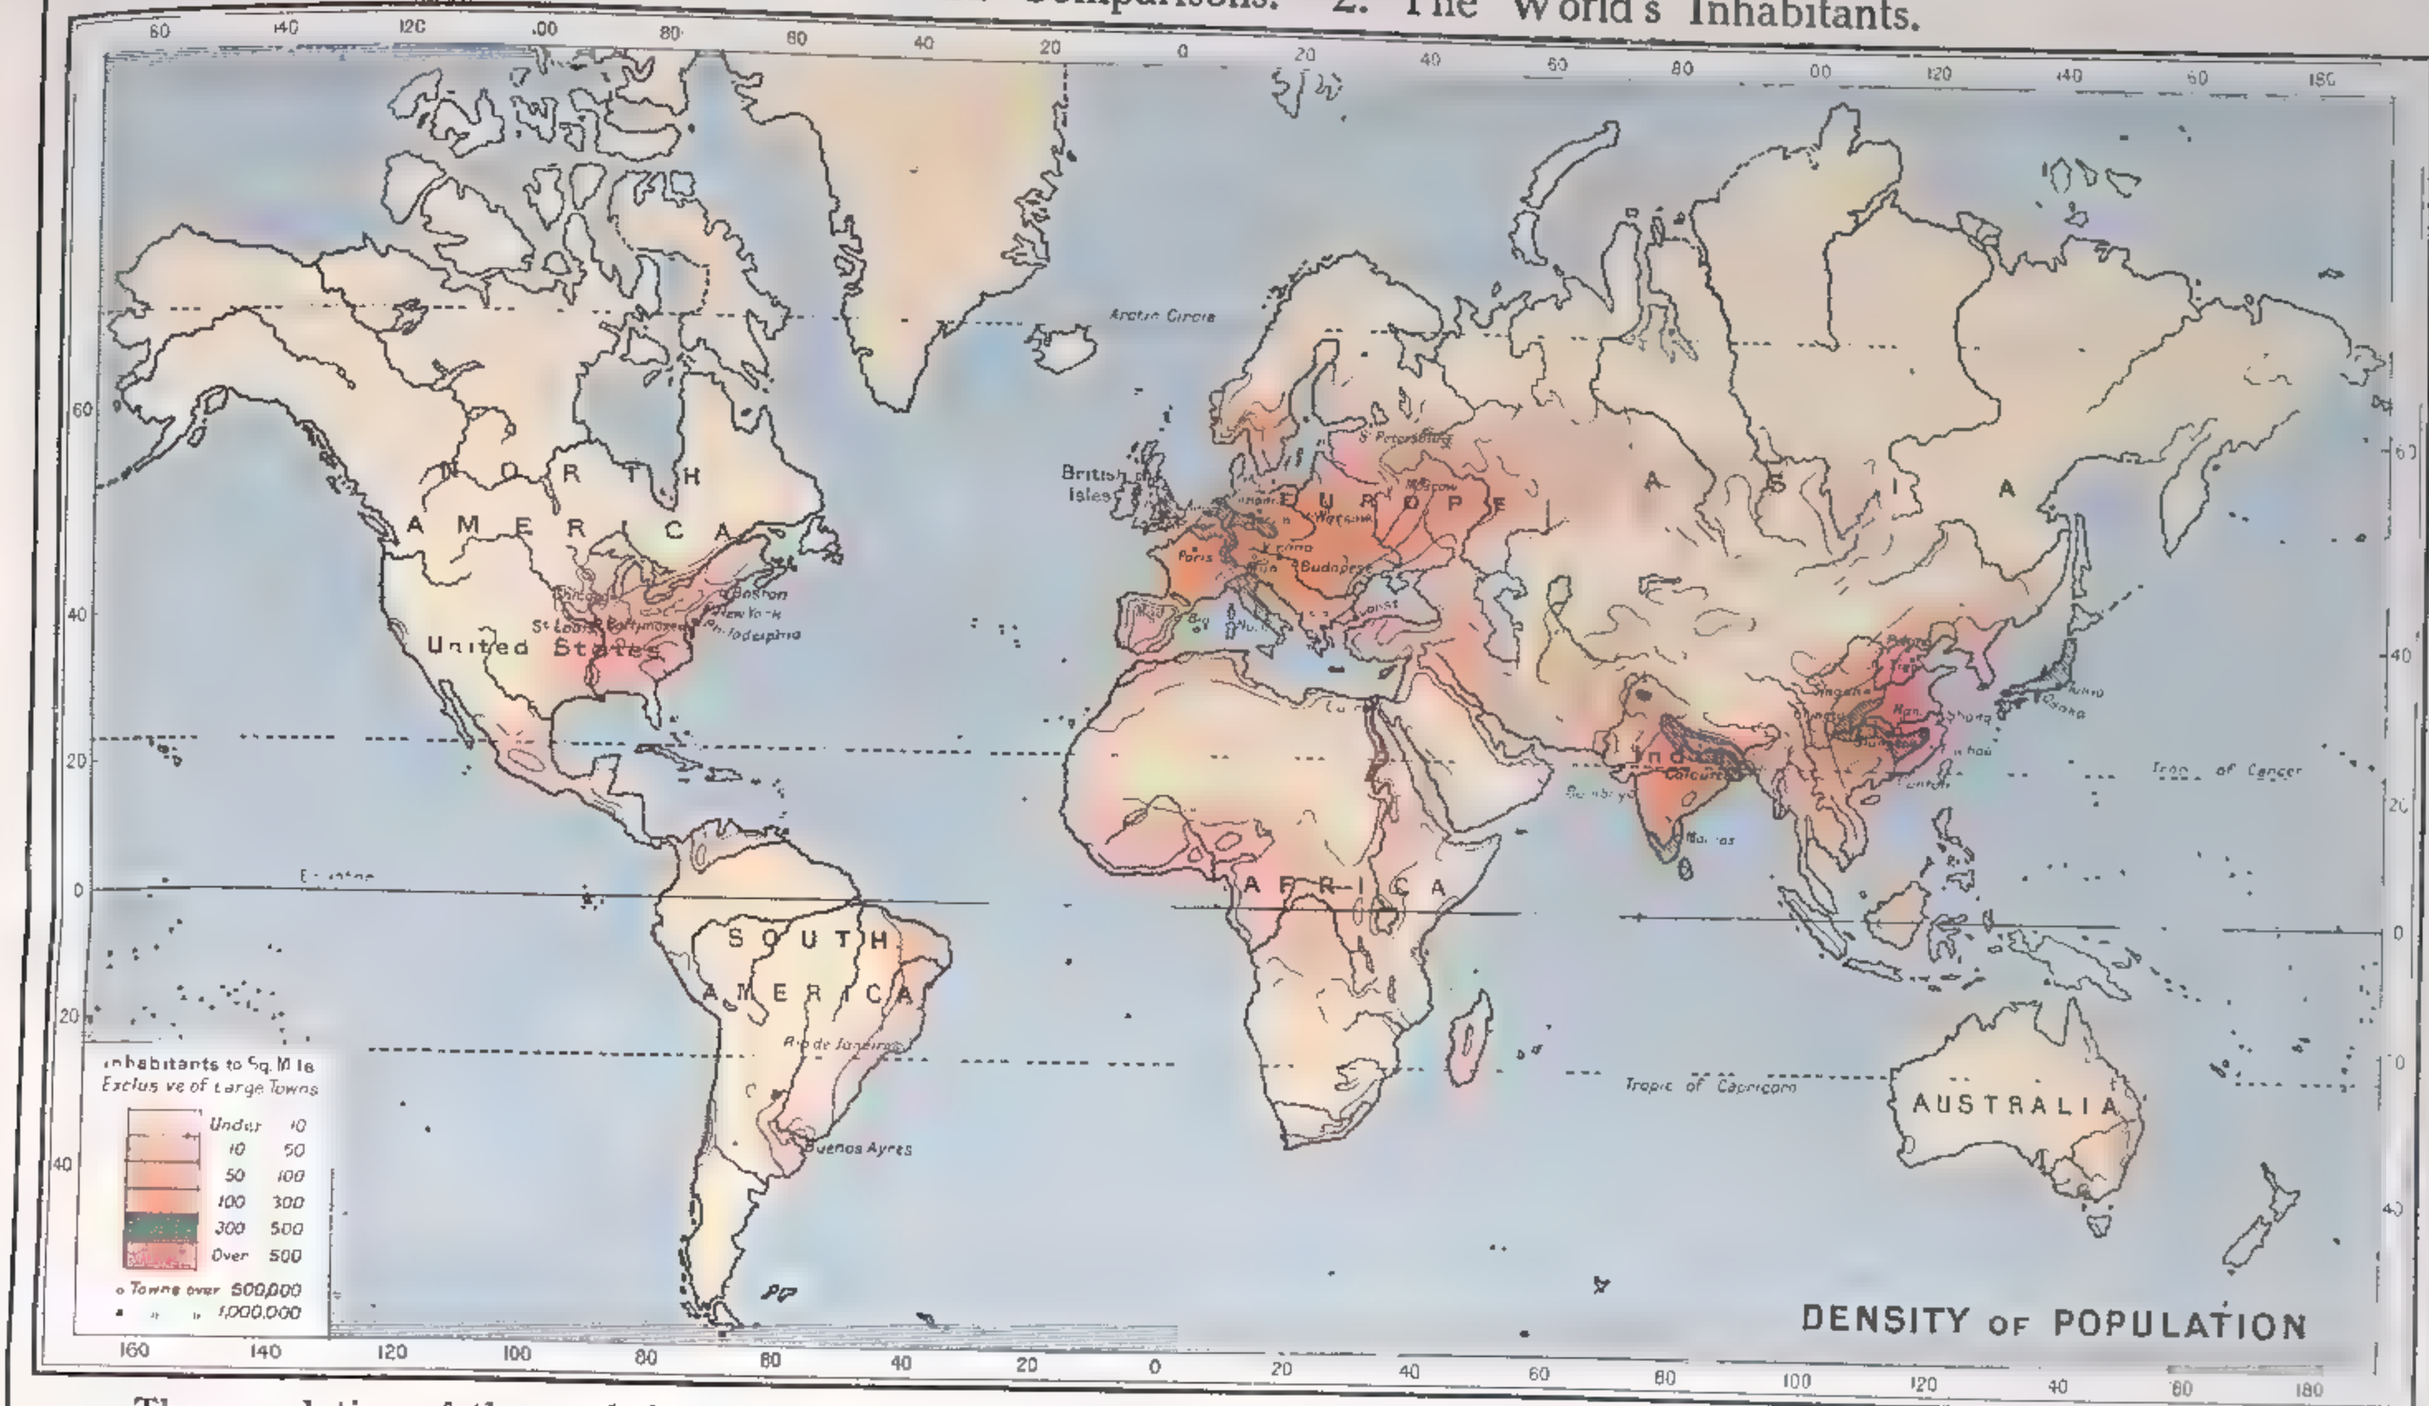
Relative Values and Comparisons.—2. The World's Inhabitants.



The population of the earth is estimated at 1,600,000,000, of whom one-fourth are within the British Empire, the Chinese Empire containing nearly another fourth of the human race. In 1800 the earth's population was 640,000,000, while in 1850 it had increased to 1,075,000,000. The above map of the World shows how the population is spread over the earth. In Europe, along the banks of the Ganges, in China and in Eastern United States, the people are closely packed together, while the desert portions of the earth are clearly shown by the dearth of population. Ethnologists generally group the world's inhabitants into three great divisions :—the Caucasian or white race, the Mongolian or yellow race, and the Negro or black race. Formerly, two more divisions were usually given—the Malay or brown race, and the American Red Indian or red race. This classification, however, conveys no clear idea of the numerous varieties of mankind, and the diagram below is therefore added to give a comparative summary of the chief races possessing distinctive characteristics of their own. In addition to the types shown, there are 64,788,000 Dravidians, 10,971,000 Hamites, 1,702,000 Australians and Polynesians, and 420,000 Hottentots. The diagram showing the proportion of the white and coloured races in the principal divisions of the British Empire has been introduced to show the fundamental problems which statesmen have to face when dealing with our over-sea possessions. It is frequently forgotten that British South Africa is a black man's country. The ascendancy of the British or Boer is of much less importance than the question of the ascendancy of the white man. The handful of whites in India have done an immense amount of good in their attempts to solve the great problems peculiar to that country.

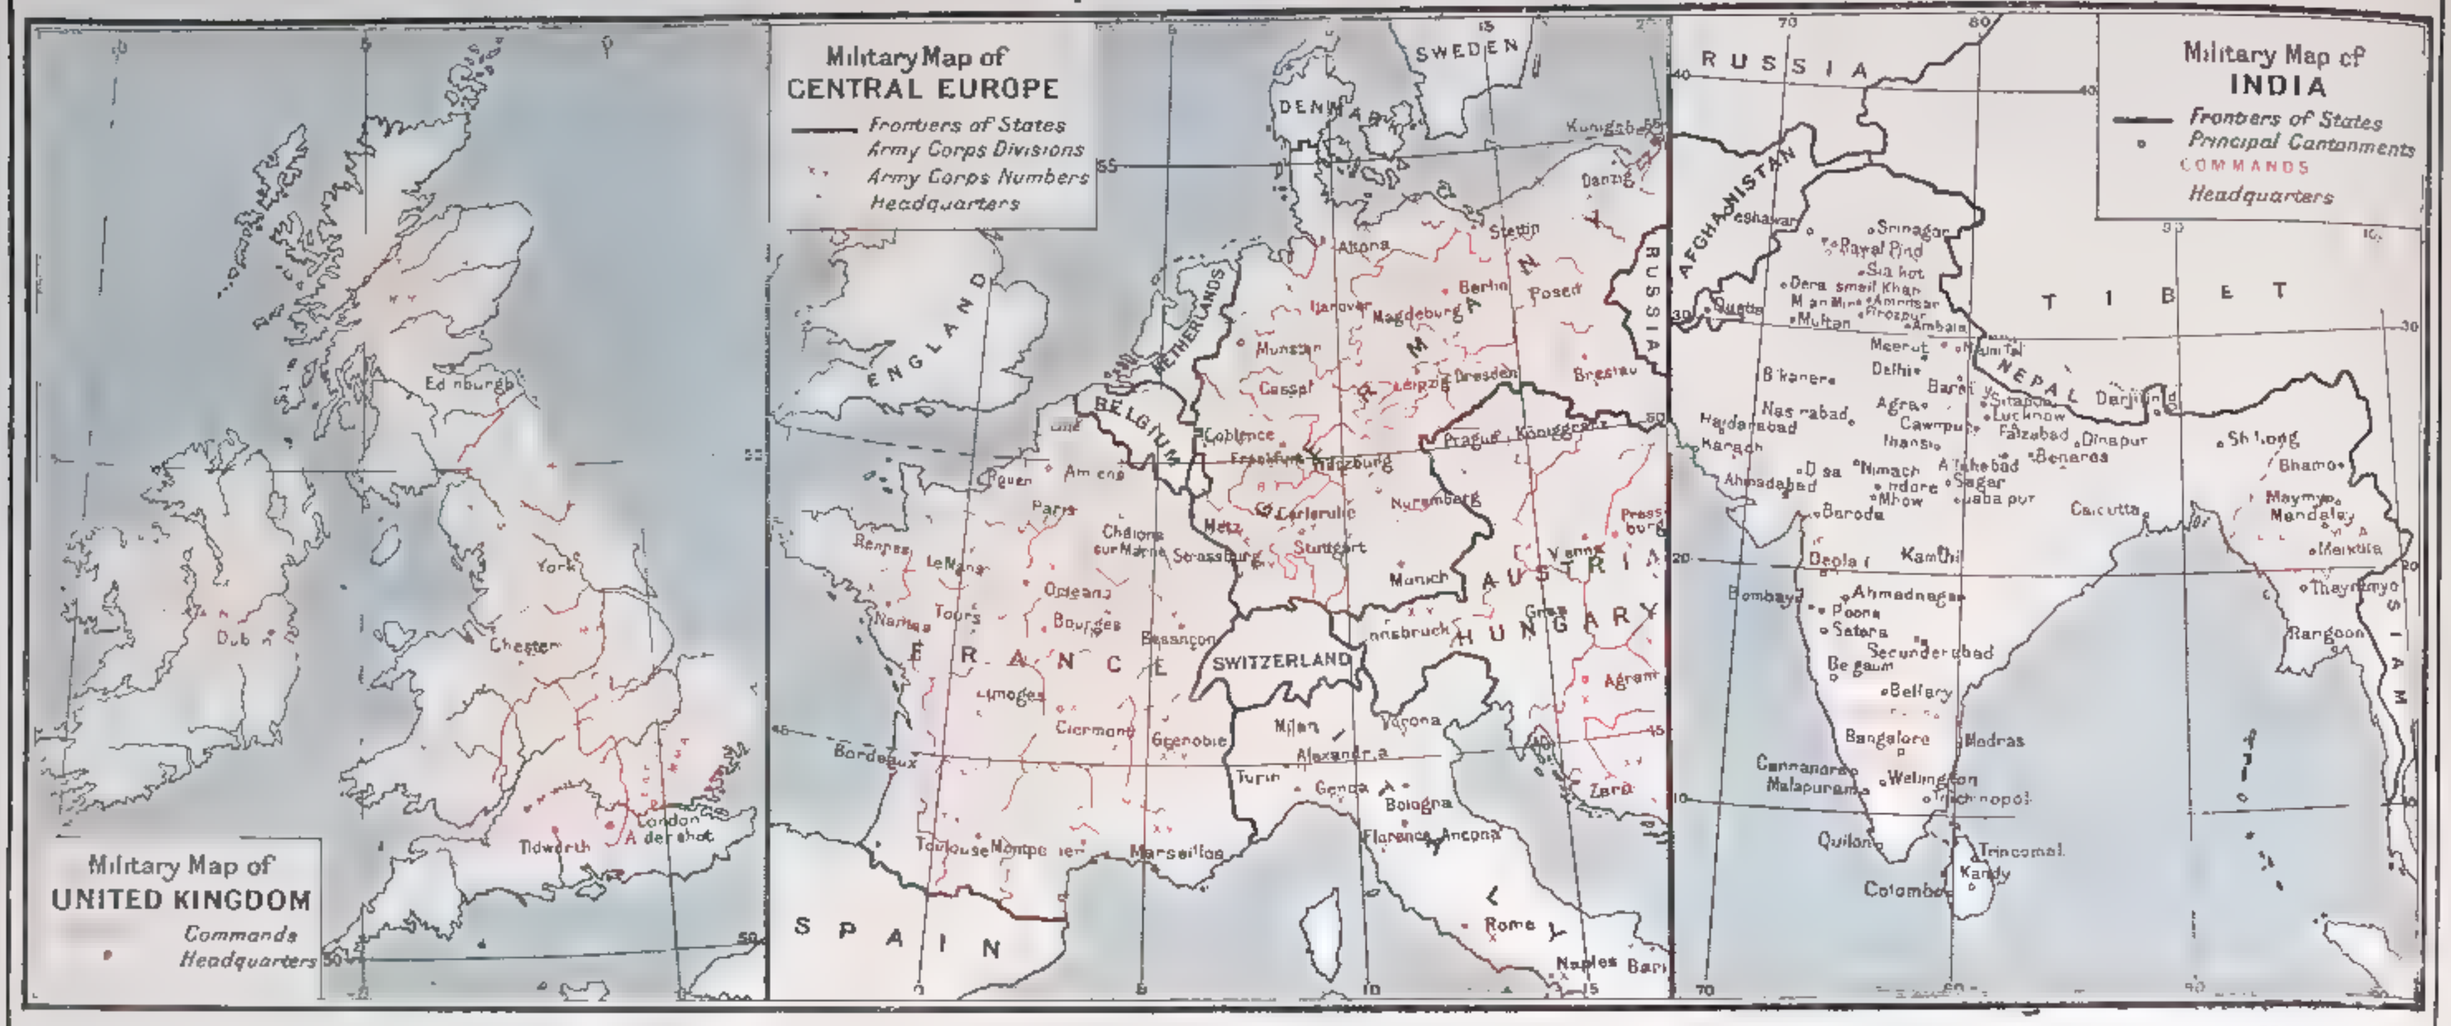
Relative Values and Comparisons.—3. The Armies of the World



The military systems of the world include an "active army" in constant readiness for war, and a "reserve" of men liable to be called out on the outbreak of hostilities. The actual strength of an army is to be judged not merely by the available number of troops, but also by its armaments, organization, discipline, and mobility, and the material resources of the country it exists to defend. The British army is small as compared with those of the continent, but practically the whole of it is available for foreign service at any time, while the continental Powers have only a limited supply of troops that can safely be sent abroad, as the home strength of their armies must be maintained to correspond with the armies of surrounding nations, so as to preserve the balance of power.

The diagram showing the sizes of the principal armies of the world gives the number of men on the peace footing, and excludes reserves, militia, and volunteers. The number of men available in time of war is given within brackets, but these are more or less paper figures, as the actual number that could be put into the field depends upon the stock of rifles and other equipments, as well as the reserve of officers and questions of organization and commissariat. The figures for the United Kingdom do not include the 75,000 men on the Indian establishment. The diagram of the various sections of the British Army shows only the men who are more or less under War Office administration. In addition to these, there are about 106,600 Colonial troops under the control of the various Colonial Governments, and about 200,000 Indian native troops maintained by native princes. The high expenditure of the British Army is inevitable with a system of voluntary enlistment, and represents the price paid for our immunity from conscription. France, with a smaller annual expenditure, has an army on the peace footing four times larger than our own. In addition to the normal yearly expenditure on our army, there are loans annually recurring; about £3,000,000 is spent upon services in connection with the military forces of the Colonial and Foreign Offices; and about £20,000,000 is spent on the Indian Army.

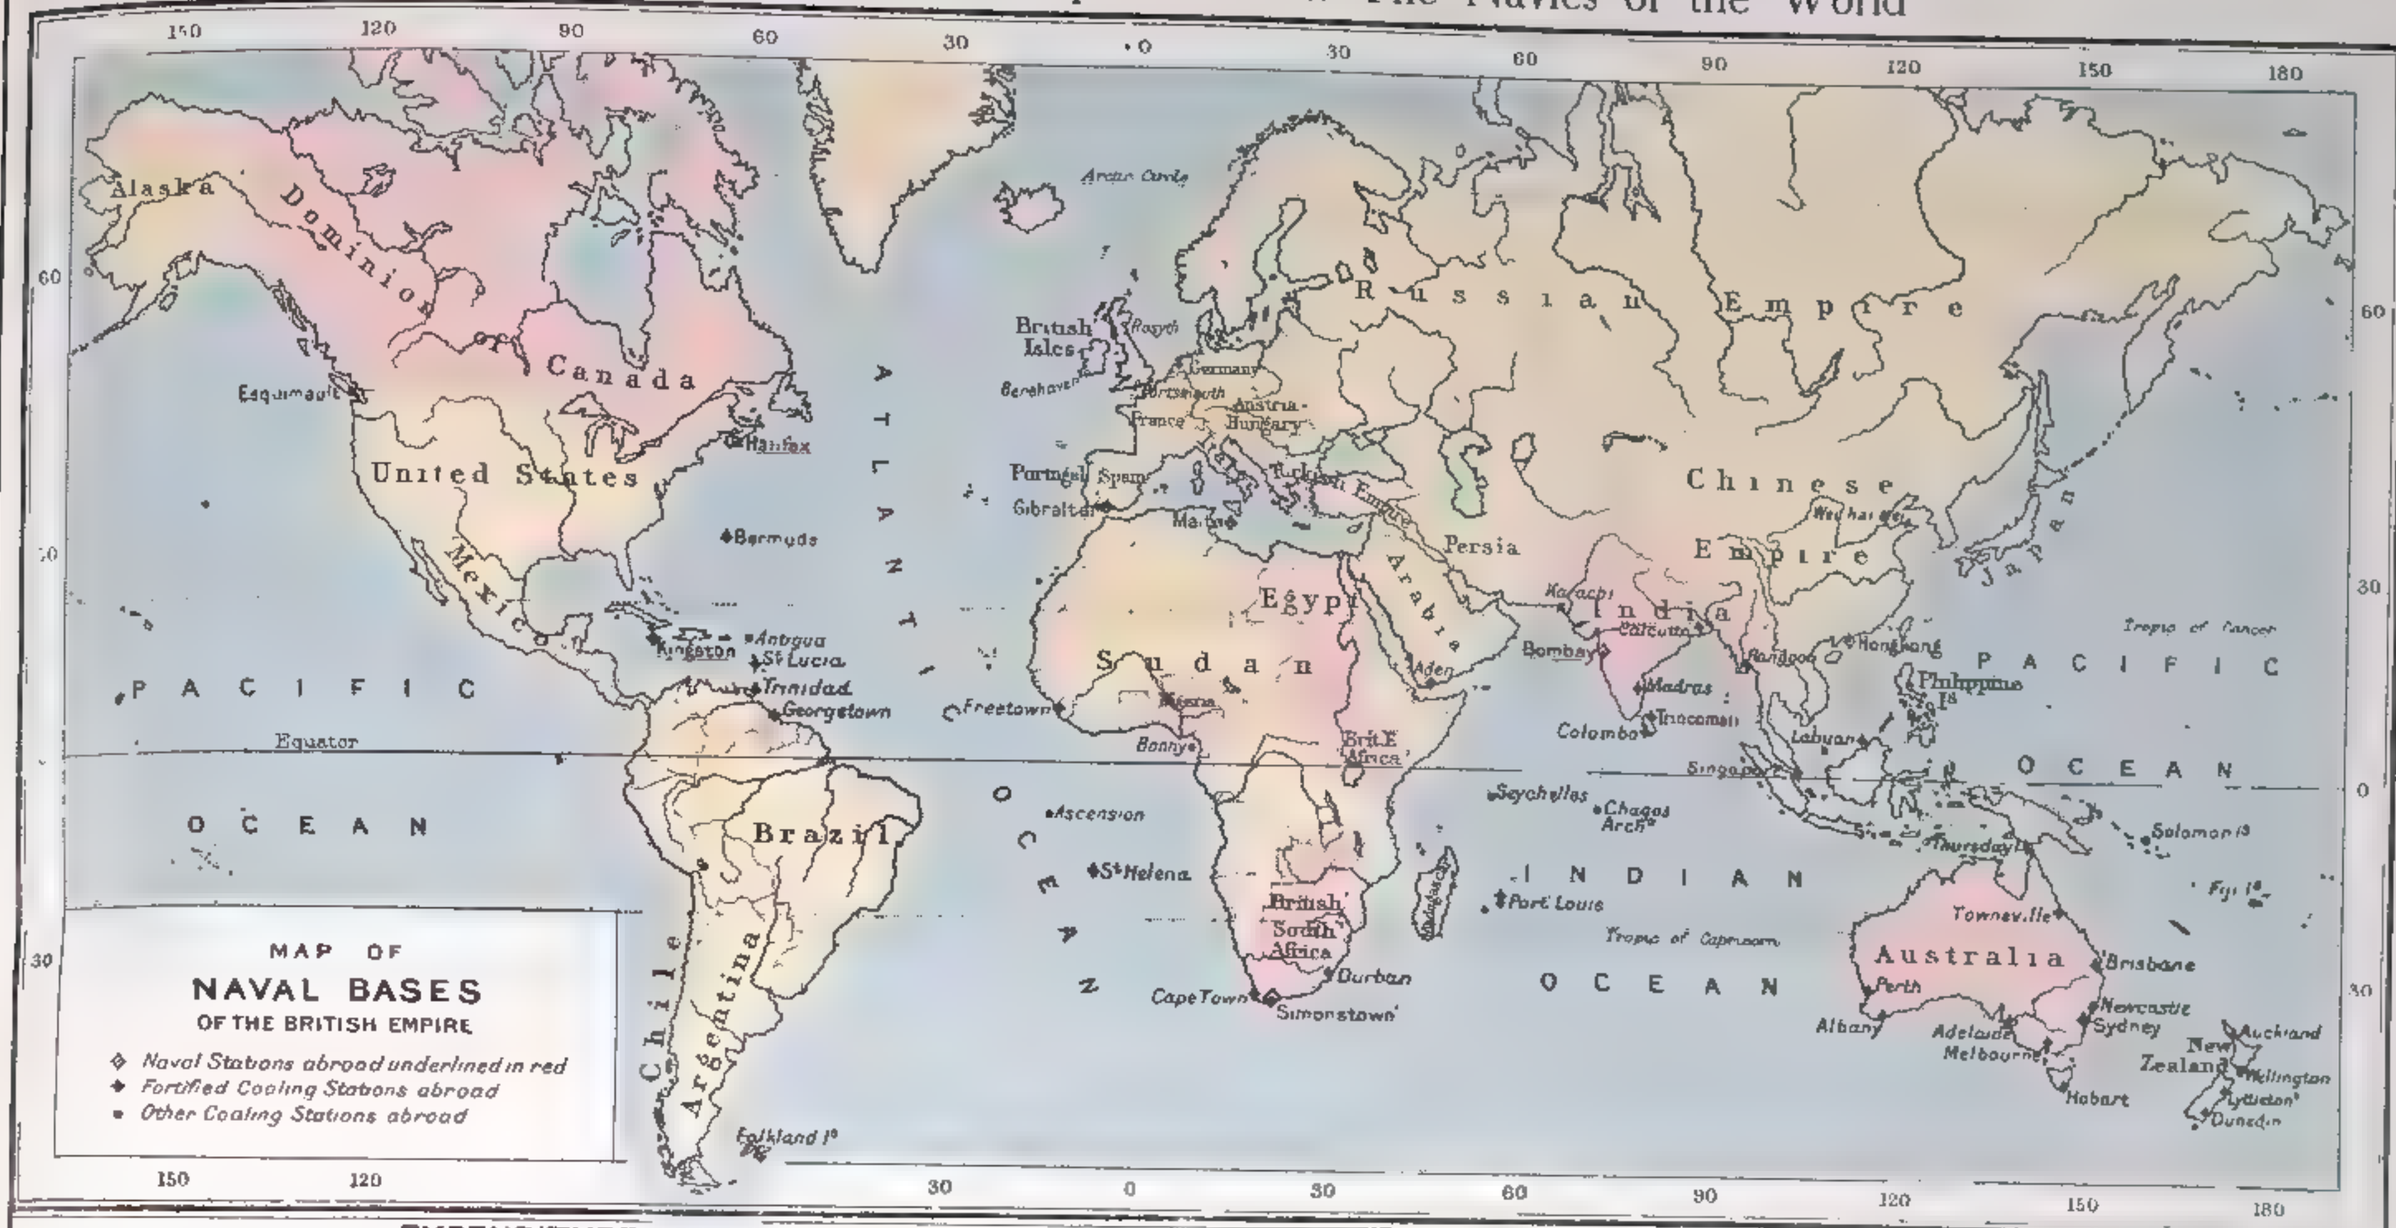
Relative Values and Comparisons.—4. The Navies of the World



EXPENDITURE ON THE NAVY DURING THE LAST 20 YEARS (Expenditure on new ships coloured brown).

A powerful Navy is essential to a maritime nation for the protection of her over-sea commerce. For many years it has been an axiom of British naval policy that the British Navy should equal in strength the combined fleets of the next two largest naval powers. Great Britain at present has 60 battleships and 125 cruisers, against the 61 battleships and 77 cruisers of France and Germany: and she has been the first naval power to introduce the "Dreadnoughts," a new type of war-vessel, which may render all modern navies obsolete.

Within recent years the disposition of the various British fleets has been modified, a considerable portion of the available vessels having been withdrawn from foreign parts, and the most powerful ships concentrated in home waters. There is a reserve fleet stationed at the naval dockyards of Chatham, Portsmouth, and Devonport, which comprises 13 battleships, 24 cruisers and 120 smaller vessels. Other home dockyards are Portland, Pembroke, Sheerness, Haulbowline in Ireland, and Rosyth (constructing) in Scotland. In addition to these, Britain possesses 9 naval stations abroad, and 37 coaling stations, and in this respect is immeasurably superior to other nations, France only having 6 naval stations abroad, and Germany, Russia and Japan, one apiece. The diagrams of the comparative strengths of the great navies are confined to showing the effective fighting ships at the beginning of 1907, vessels building or projected being omitted.

THE PROGRESS OF SHIPPING.—There is no record of the advent of the first sailing ship, but sails were probably used for propulsion in the earliest ages of the world. Steam was first applied to navigation purposes about 1707, when Papin experimented with a paddle-wheel steamer in the River Fulda in Germany, and up to 1800 further progress was made in adapting steam to navigation. Passengers and goods were still, however, carried across the oceans in sailing vessels in the early years of the nineteenth century, and it was not until 1819 that the first auxiliary steam-power vessel, the Savannah, laid the foundation of the great "Western Ocean" trade of the present day. The Royal William, in 1833, was the first vessel to steam across the Atlantic Ocean without the aid of sails: the voyage occupying 22 days. The first steam passage to India was made in 1825, in the Enterprise, via the Cape of Good Hope; and in the same year the William Fawcett, the pioneer steamer of the famous "P. & O." Company, was launched. The opening of the Suez Canal, in 1869, changed the course of the Indian carrying trade. Iron gradually began to supersede wood in the construction of the early steamers, and in 1838 the R. F. Stockton was the first iron steamer to cross the Atlantic. She was also the first screw steamer used in America. The Britannia of the Cunard Company was the first steamer to carry the American mails. This vessel of 1,139 tons was considered a wonder in her day, but she has long been surpassed by the modern floating palaces. The Mauretania, launched for the same company in 1906, 790 feet long, gross tonnage 33,200, with a speed of 25 knots, is the largest vessel in the world. The Amerika, of the Norddeutscher Lloyd, has a rate of 23¼ knots, and a tonnage of 23,000. The Deutschland, of the Hamburg American Line, is at present the fastest ocean steamer in the world, but her record will be eclipsed by the Mauretania when she is put on service. The Victorian, of the Allan Line, launched in 1904, was the first Atlantic steamer to be fitted with turbine engines.

The Tonnage of Merchant Vessels belonging to the British Empire is 40·5 per cent. of the tonnage of the World. The tonnage belonging to the home country is 10,555,800, while 1,600,000 tons of shipping is distributed among the British Possessions over the seas. A fairly reliable idea of our position in the ocean carrying trade may be gleaned from the fact that we have 496 vessels of over 5,000 tons each, while Germany has 144, France 62, Japan 26, and the United States 73. The Hamburg-American Company are the largest steamship owners in the world, with a tonnage of 725,000, the Norddeutscher Lloyd comes next with 603,000 tons, then the British India S.N. Co. with 440,000, and the P. & O. Company with 401,000 tons. The number of Apprentices in the British Mercantile Marine is steadily decreasing. In 1870 there were 18,300 indentures in existence, but in 1904 this number had dwindled down to 5,179. Excluding Lascars and Asiatics, the number of Foreigners employed in British ships has gradually increased from 10 per cent. in 1870 to 22 5 per cent. in 1904. The total figures for British vessels include 176,980 British sailors, 39,840 foreigners, and 259,500 Lascars and Asiatics.

The Earning Capacity of the shipping of the principal maritime countries is taken from the latest available statistics. The total amount earned annually by the shipping of the world is estimated at £102,000,000, more than half of which is earned by British vessels. Shipping is supposed to earn £2 per ton of carrying power.

The number of vessels which passed through the Suez Canal in 1904 was 4,237, with a gross tonnage of 18,661,000; 2,679 of these were British vessels, with a gross tonnage of 12,165,000. This total includes several passages of the same vessel. The transit receipts of the canal amounted to £4,616,000. By a convention signed in 1888, the canal is exempt from blockade, and vessels of all nations are allowed to pass through it in peace or war. In 1904, owing to the Russo-Japanese war, only 6 Japanese vessels passed through the canal, compared with 61 vessels of 331,560 tons in 1902.

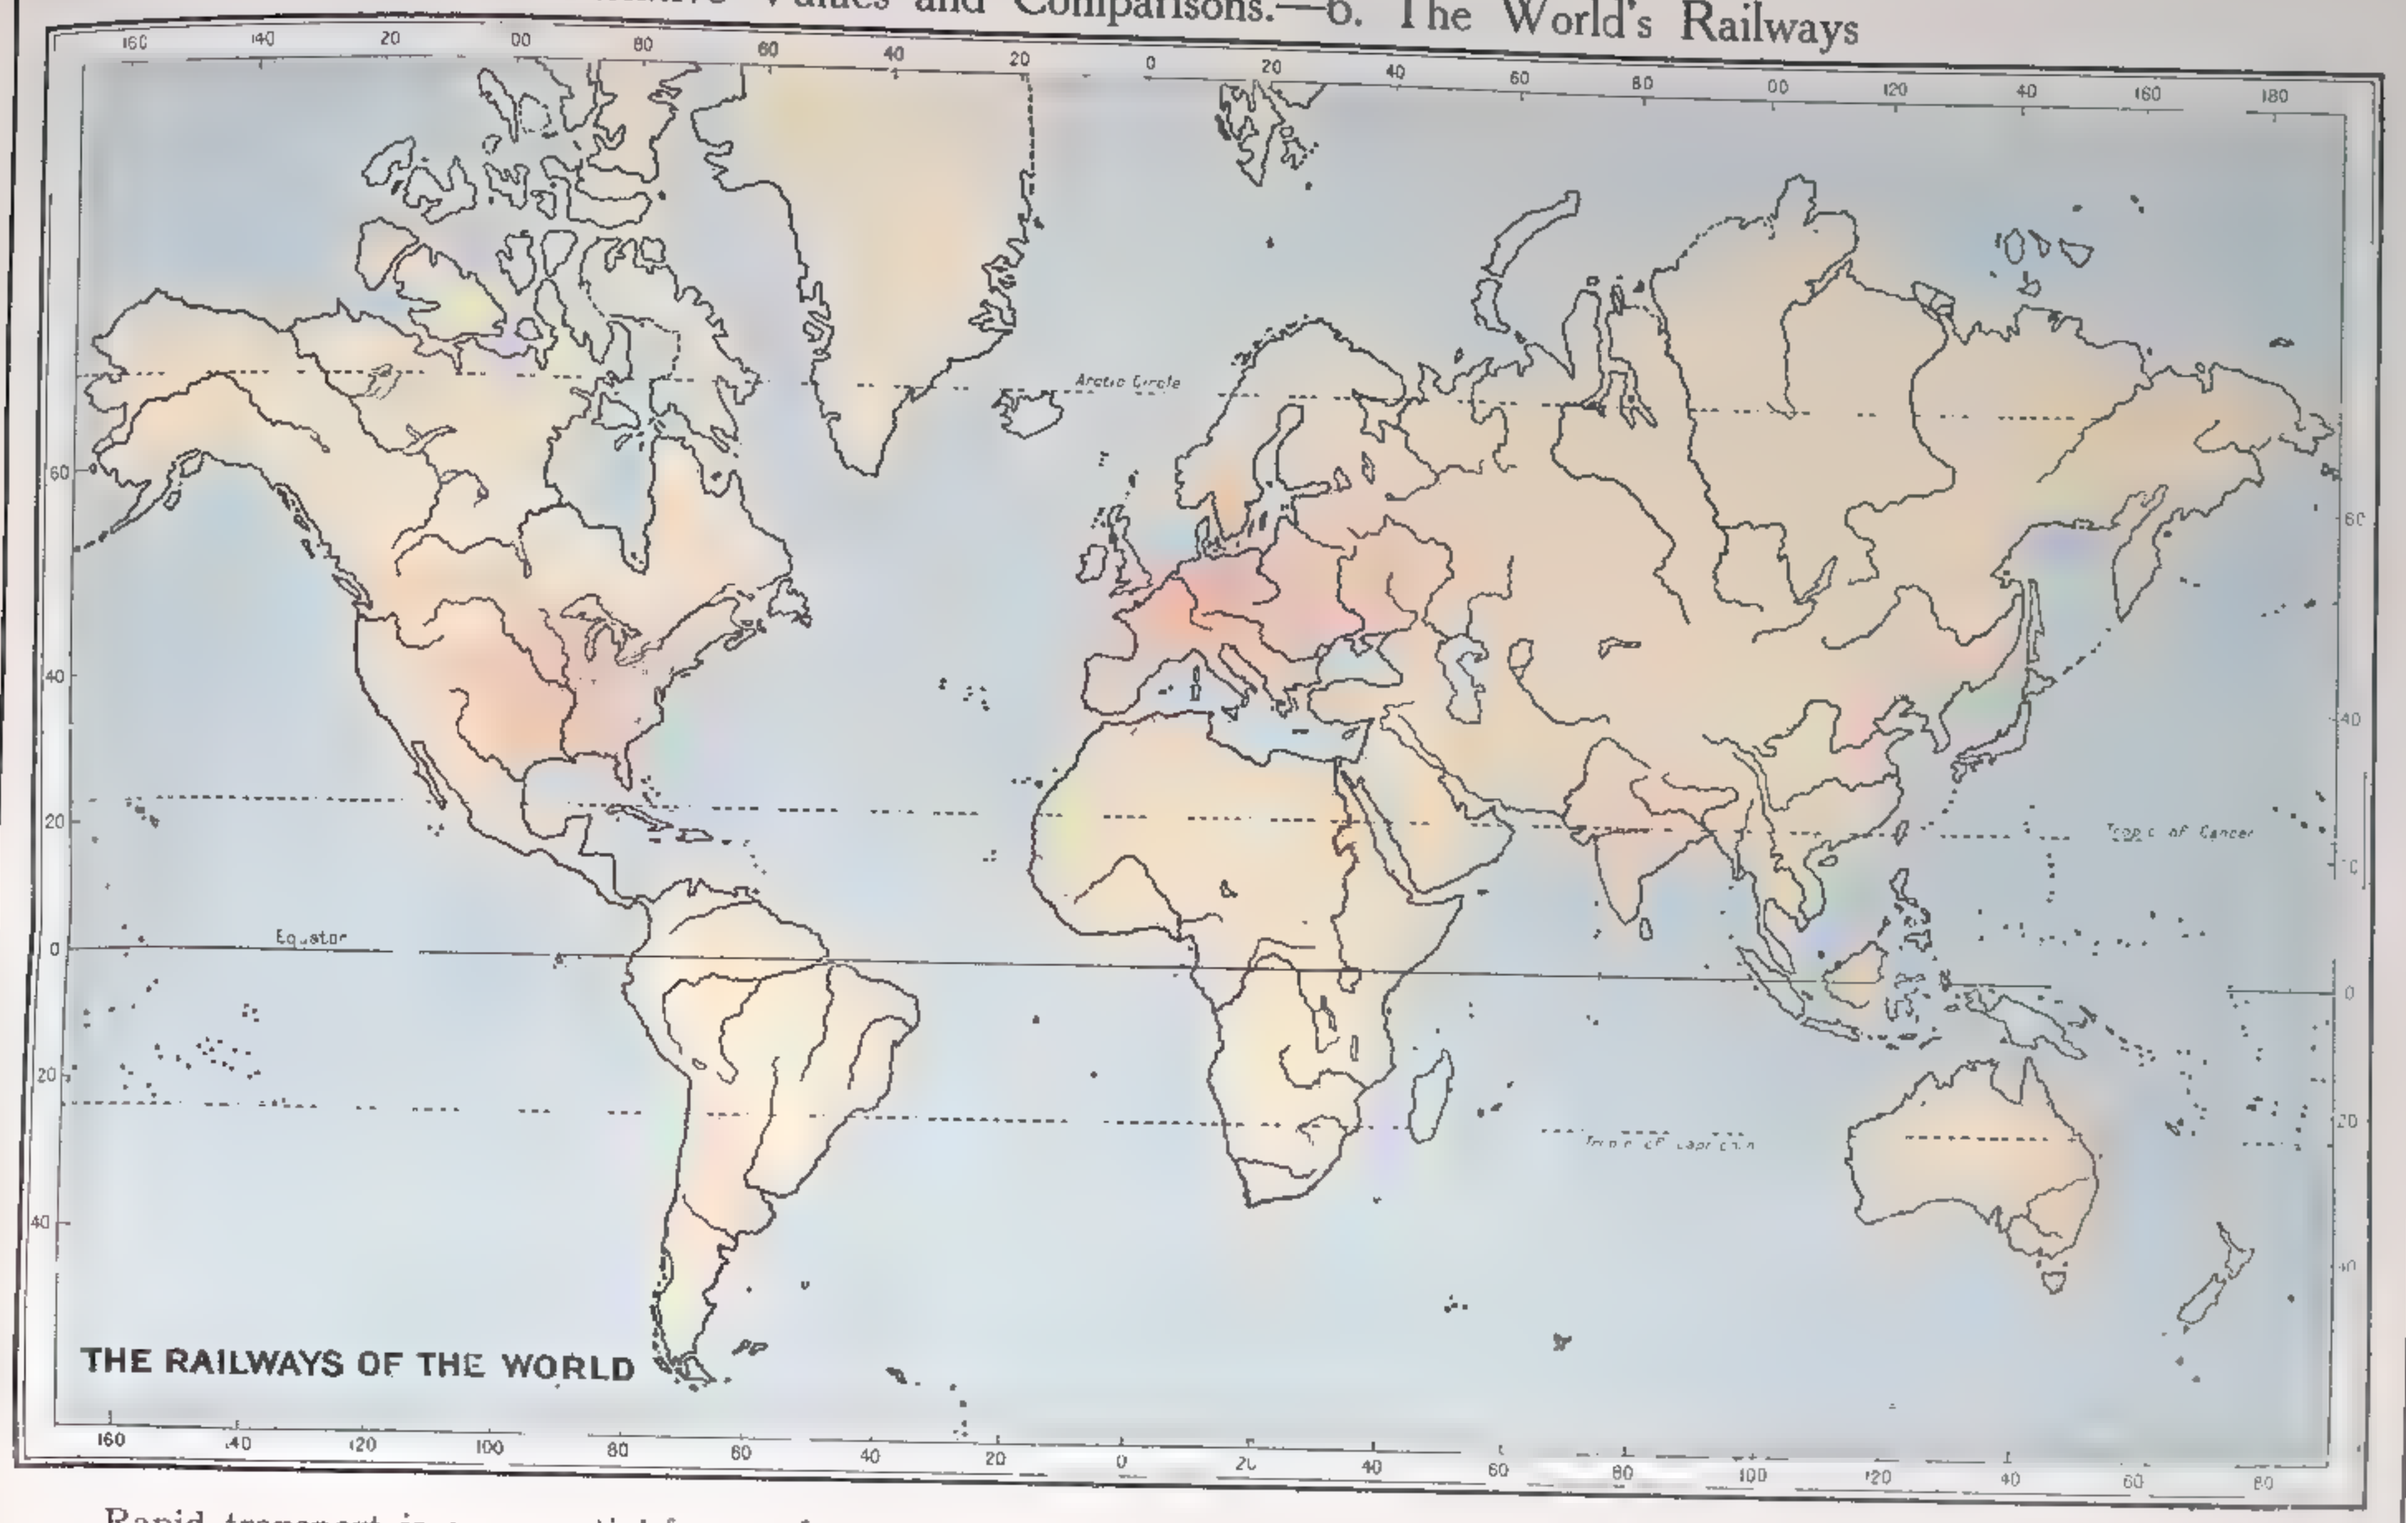
Relative Values and Comparisons.—6. The World's Railways



Rapid transport is an essential factor of commercial activity, and the enormous industrial development of modern times is largely due to the introduction of railways. Wooden rails were first used in England about 1630, to decrease the friction of the coal wagons on the roads leading from the coal pits. A hundred years later iron rails were substituted for wood, and early in the 18th century "edge rails" were introduced in the Welsh quarries. Steam was first employed for haulage purposes in 1825, when the Stockton and Darlington railway was opened, but the foundation of the present vast development of railways was laid in 1830 by the opening of the line between Liverpool and Manchester. In 1855 the railway mileage in the United Kingdom amounted to 8,280 miles, and at the present time it has increased to about 23,000 miles. The first railway constructed on the European continent ran between Antwerp and Malines: to-day a traveller can board a train at Calais and be carried by rail across two continents to Port Arthur, a distance of 7,500 miles. The first United States railway was opened in 1827 at Quincy in Massachusetts. In 1860 the United States railway mileage had increased to 30,626 miles, and it is now about one half that of the rest of the world. The American rates for the conveyance of goods are much cheaper than elsewhere, and this forms one of the reasons for the rapid industrial expansion of the United States. In India railways were first laid down in 1853, and their total length is now about 28,000 miles. The use of four different gauges in India is a great hindrance to through traffic, more than one-half the mileage being on the 5 ft. 6 in. gauge, while the remainder is built either on the metre, the 2 ft. 6 in., or the 2 foot gauge. From the railway map given above, it will be seen that not only does a network of railways cover the civilized parts of the world, but that the locomotive is penetrating into the remoter and more inaccessible regions of the earth, and with its ally, the steam ship, is opening up these regions to international commerce. In many cities and suburban districts electricity is displacing steam as a motive power for passenger trains, and its use in this connexion is likely to be largely extended in the near future.

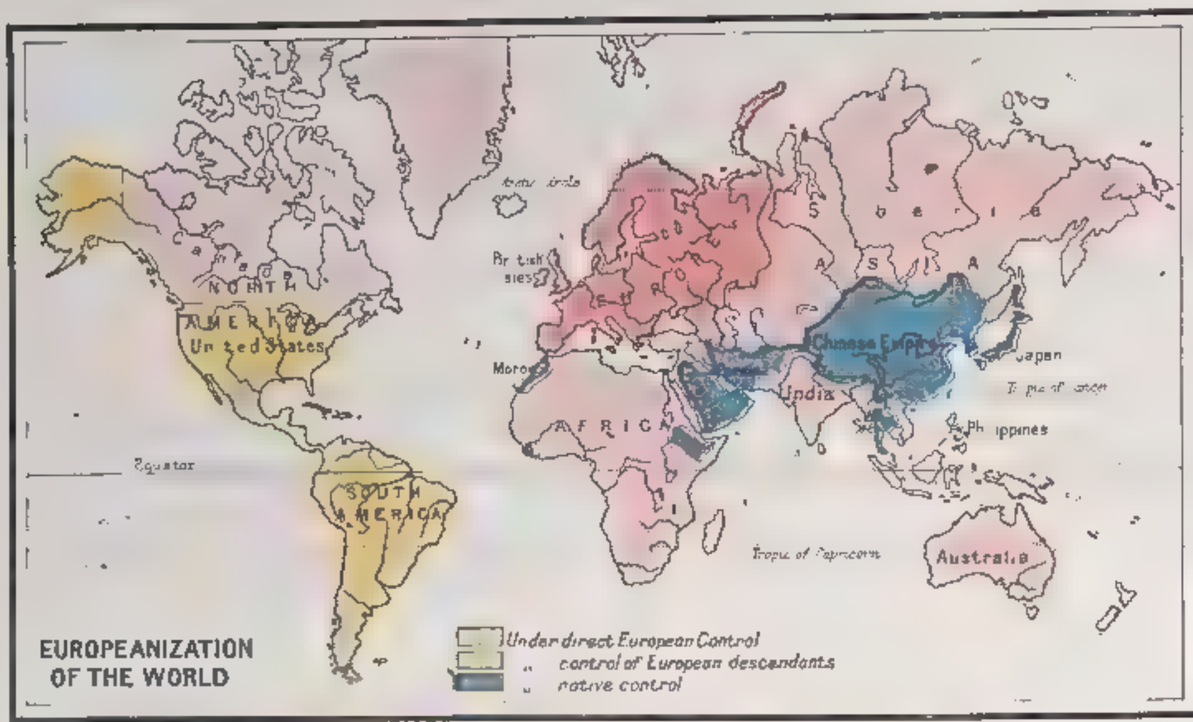
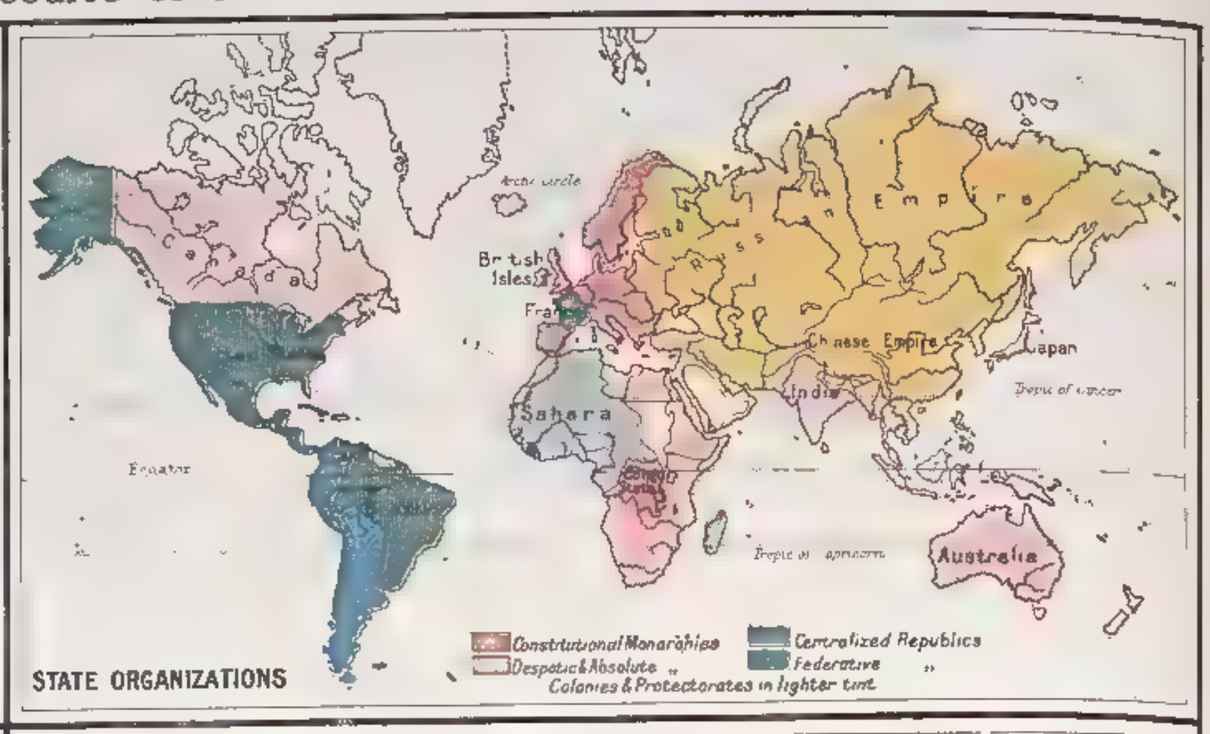
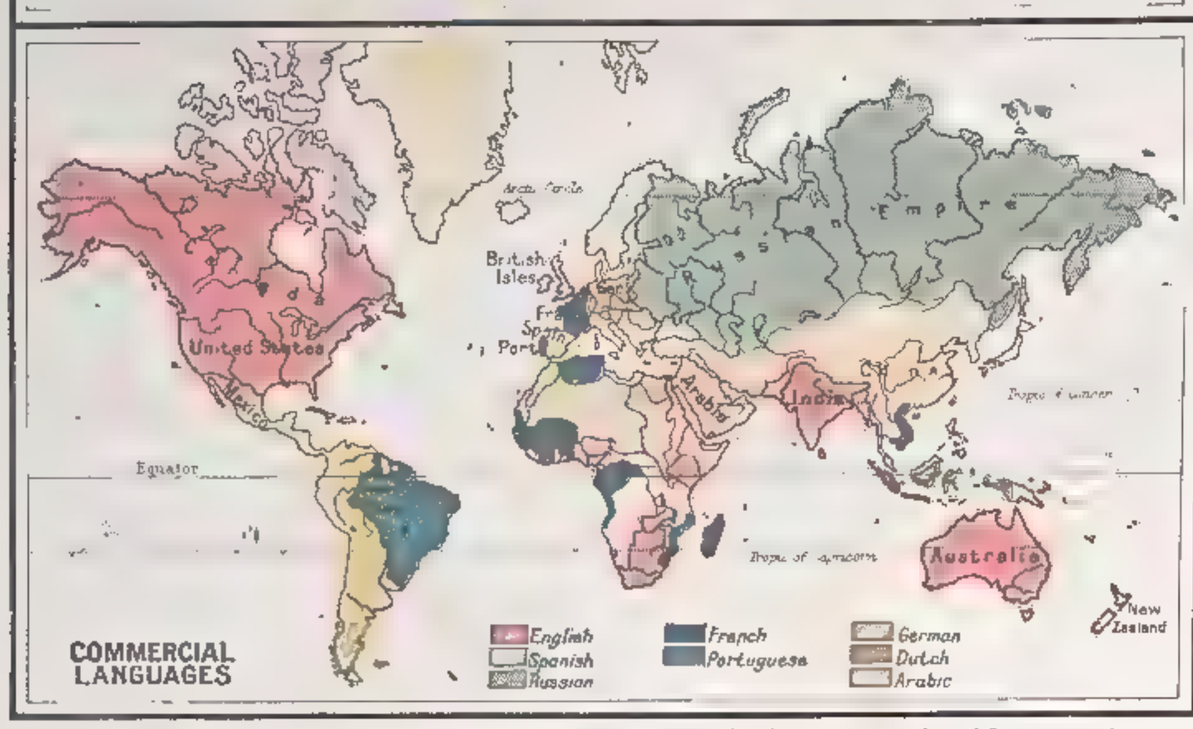
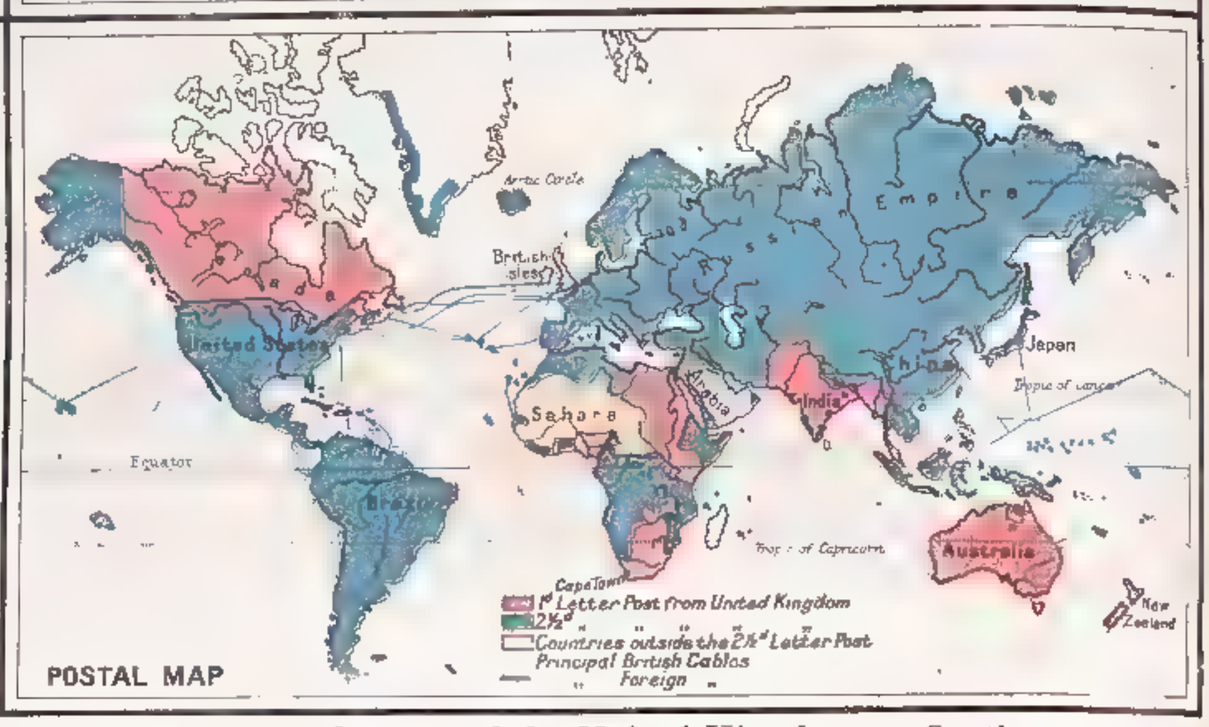
Commercial Intercourse of Nations









Europeanization of the World.—One of the most significant signs of the times is the spread of European influence over the habitable globe. The nations of the world to-day, with but few exceptions, are either under the sway of European powers, or are governed by the descendants of Europeans. Most of the regions still remaining under native rulers, such as China, Persia and Morocco, owe their independence more to the jealousies of the European powers than to their ability to stand alone. Even in the case of Japan, her present commanding position is due to her marvellous assimilation of western ideas and inventions. Turkey, although classed as a European power, suffers from an effete government, entirely Oriental in character, and exists as a nation only on the sufferance of the great powers.

State Organization.—The ideal form of government, a Republic where all men are equal and work for the common good, has never yet been attained. Commercial prosperity can only exist under a good and strong government, giving security and permanence to industrial enterprise, and fostering its development by the establishment of departments and agencies to watch over commercial interests. The more enlightened nations either elect their rulers by popular vote, as in the centralized Republic of France or the Federal Republic of the United States, or else possess an efficient control over their hereditary sovereigns, by Constitutions framed by the elected representatives of the people, as in the case of the United Kingdom. On the map the Russian Empire is shown still as a despotic monarchy, as the Duma, or parliament recently granted to the people, is not likely for some time to come to have the power of effectively reducing the present absolute sway of the Tsar and the bureaucracy.

Commercial Languages.—The variety of the languages in the world has always been a great bar to the free intercourse of nations. The map attempts to show the distribution of the chief commercial languages, among which English easily holds the first place, and seems designed to become the commercial language of the future. For this position, the vast commercial activity of the Anglo-Saxon race in every part of the world is responsible.

Post and Cables.—Cheap postage, introduced in the last century, gave a great impulse to commerce. The penny post in this country dates from 1840, and it has been extended till, at the present time, a letter can be sent to any part of the British Empire at this rate. The Inland postage of different countries varies, but letters can be sent from the United Kingdom to all foreign countries within the Postal Union at a uniform rate of 2½d. the half-ounce. The first Atlantic cable was only laid in 1866, and now over 200,000 miles of cable girdle the oceans; including an All-British Cable round the world, independent of foreign control at any point.
